FOREWORD

The fortunate possessor of this remarkable survey of Buddhist bibliography by the Japanese savant Hajime Nakamura could scarcely anticipate the rich contents by the author's modest preface. Here he briefly details labors of over two decades, starting with articles on Japanese bibliography, reaching out in notes to Western bibliography. The range of Buddhist bibliography is encyclopedic, and the work is therefore properly entitled Indian Buddhism.

It is a pleasure for the editor and the publishing firm Motilal Banarsidass to inaugurate the Buddhist Traditions Series by reprinting Professor Nakamura's annotated bibliography. The further volumes in this series will be of smaller format. The exception is gladly made for Professor Nakamura's work because a photographic reduction would have seriously impaired the consultation of the text and of the numerous Sino-Japanese characters.

PREFACE

This work will present a survey of Indian Buddhism with bibliographical notes. The main sentences will constitute a general survey, but studies by scholars are mentioned occasionally with evaluation.

Originally this work was intended to introduce recent studies carried on especially by the Japanese scholars; but in order to evaluate them the author had to pay due attention to the works of the Western and Asian, especially Indian scholars, hence they have also been included.

Several parts of this survey were published earlier in the following journals:

Bukkyō Kenkyū, Hamamatsu, No. 3, August 1973, p. 88f.; No. 5, March 1976, p. 167f.; No. 6, February 1977, p. 164f.

The Journal of Intercultural Studies, No. 2, 1975, pp. 84–122; No. 3, 1976, pp. 60–145; No. 4, 1977, pp. 77–135; No. 5, 1978, pp. 89–138.

These have been revised and enlarged and some sections on the historical background and logic have been newly added.

As this work of survey has been under preparation for over two decades, always improving the previous manuscripts, the style of citing sources and works is not consistent, but I hope that the main body of this book and the exhaustive, although not complete, footnotes will give readers fairly useful information and prove helpful to scholars in the future.

I am extremely grateful to Dr. Takako Tanimoto, President of the Kansai University of Foreign Studies, for establishing the Intercultural Research Institute and for sponsoring the Journal of Intercultural Studies, a yearly journal with high academic and technical standards. I am thankful to Professor Haruo Kozu, Director of the Intercultural Research Institute for including this survey in the monograph series of the institute. Dr. Ramesh Mathur took the initiative and responsibility to get this survey published in the present form and his colleague Ms. Kerstin Vidaeus shared equally the entire editing and publication work. Without the kind help and assistance of these ladies and gentlemen, this work would not have been brought to this state of completion. Herewith, I express my sincere gratitude to all of them.

I am very appreciative of the fine work done by the staff members, Mr. Eikichi Hirakawa and Mr. Tadashi Fujimura, and the workers of the Sanseido Press and commend them for their spirit of cooperation and hard work.

CHAPTER I

GENERAL SURVEY OF BUDDHISM

Many surveys, such as "An Outline of Buddhism", have been written by Western as well as Japanese scholars.<sup>1</sup> Although their ways of approach are somewhat different, the method which is still greatly used is that of explaining the whole of Buddhism under the traditional threefold scheme of 'Buddha, dharma and saṅgha'.<sup>2</sup> In the history of Buddhism we notice several stages of development.<sup>3</sup> Among these, Early Buddhism has been regarded as the most important as the starting point for later development in Asia, and has been greatly studied.<sup>4</sup>

With regard to the nature of Buddhist thought, there is a variety of opinions. Some scholars say that it is rationalistic,<sup>5</sup> while others say non-rationalistic.<sup>6</sup> Studies of Buddhism utilizing the method of problem-approach have been launched, although they have not yet been completely fruitful.<sup>7</sup>

II, 1948. 2nd ed. 1962, in one volume, 4+18+1132+76 pp. This is the most comprehensive and detailed outline that has ever been written by Japanese scholars. This book consists of three sections: 'Buddha'; 'Theories of Buddhism'; and 'Society'; and covers almost all parts of Buddhism. In the second section the theories of Buddhism are substantially divided into two parts, i.e., faith in self-interest, the Lesser Vehicle; and faith in altruism, the Greater Vehicle. The author discusses all the sects that exist or have existed, and concludes with an explanation of the Sōtō Zen sect, of which he is a member. A brief introductory work based upon it is H. The part of Buddhist literature of Moritz Winternitz's life-work, Geschichte der indischen Litteratur, was translated and published with critical additions and references to Chinese versions by Gishō Nakano and Mamoru Osaragi: Indo Bukkyō Bungakushi (インド仏教文学史, History of Buddhist literature of India), Tokyo, Heigo Shuppansha, 1923. The reference to Chinese versions of Buddhist texts is something that Western readers will not find in the German original or in the English translation. # CHAPTER II

EARLY BUDDHISM

1. The Time of the Rise of Buddhism

It is known that when Buddhism and Jainism came into existence, cities (nagara) had been established, and that the political powers centered around them.<sup>1</sup> The age of the rise of Buddhism, Jainism and other heterodoxies from the viewpoint of Brahmanism occurred in the age when cities came into existence as the term 'city' (nagara) was not mentioned in the Veda. The use of iron utensils came to spread among common people in general.<sup>2</sup> Riches were accumulated in cities.<sup>2'</sup> People enjoyed life of affluence.<sup>2''</sup> Ways of cosmetics were developed in the time when Buddhism appeared.<sup>3</sup> The rich people came to be powerful and influential in cities; the caste system was on the decline. Even republican governments had been formed, while other areas were kingdoms; the former were to be overcome by the latter.<sup>4</sup>

In the scriptures of early Buddhism it is said that there existed seven or ten<sup>5</sup> big countries, and later to mention the sixteen countries (janapadas) came to be stereotyped.

Slavery existed in India at that time; slaves were severely punished, but not exploited on the large scale as were known in the West.<sup>6</sup> Buddhists endeavored to meet the situation, in order to give adequate guidance to the political leaders of those days.<sup>7</sup> Buddhist scriptures provide ample materials for studying the society<sup>8</sup> and the geography<sup>9</sup> of ancient India. According to the Jātakas, kings were the only land owners; and peasants, who were producers, were merely tenants or participants.<sup>10</sup> From studies in economics, we can observe that the monetary system was comparatively weak, and that the guilds were not nearly so influential as in the West.<sup>11</sup>

In terms of the background of Early Buddhism, the merchant class, which grew increasingly prominent, could not but feel attracted by a doctrine which offered them a position superior to the one accorded by Brahmanism, where brahmins and kṣatriyas predominated.<sup>12</sup>

We may now turn our attention specifically to studies in Indian Buddhism by Japanese scholars. The problems of the "Buddhist Era" and of the date of the Buddha have been dealt with from several points of view. There have been many dissensions, even among Buddhists.<sup>13</sup> Southern Buddhists were unanimous in celebrating the 2,500th "Mahā-parinirvāṇa" Day of Lord Buddha in A.D. 1956.<sup>14</sup> In Ceylon, India, Burma, Thailand, and other southern countries, the celebrations were subsidized by the governments; and members of the Buddhist orders officiated at the anniversary.

In northern countries, however, there have been several dissenting opinions. Most Western scholars reject the Singhalese tradition which places the death-year of Lord Buddha at 544 B.C., reflected in the choice of A.D. 1956 as the 2,500th anniversary year. This tradition cannot be traced with confidence beyond the middle of the eleventh century,<sup>15</sup> and, it is incompatible with the chronology of the kings of Magadha. The southern claim to the authenticity of their chronology is based upon the tradition that the bhikkhus made it a rule to place a dot in the Vinaya scriptures at the conclusion of their annual "Lent" (vassa). Claiming that this was done without fail, they contend that a chronology based on the number of dots in their holy book will be free from error.

However, there is room for doubt. A similar tradition was conveyed by Saṅghabhadra, who came to China in A.D. 489. He also claimed that Indian bhikkhus had placed a dot in their Vinaya each vassa, but he had counted 975 dots, which would place the death year of the Buddha in 486 B.C. and the birth year in 566 B.C.<sup>16</sup> According to Prof. Pachow, the Dotted Record indicates that the date of the passing of the Buddha is about 483 B.C., which coincides and agrees with the calculation made by W. Geiger on the basis of the Pali chronicles.<sup>16'</sup>

In terms of chronological antiquity, the tradition of Saṅghabhadra is more reliable than that held by southern Buddhists. Thus, under the leadership of the late Junjirō Takakusu, who adopted the Saṅghabhadra tradition, many Japanese Buddhists celebrated the 2,500th anniversary in A.D. 1932. The Jōdo, Jōdo-Shin and Nichiren sects, however, did not collaborate with them officially, because the founders of these sects, Hōnen, Shinran and Nichiren, respectively, adopted the legend that the death-year of the Buddha was 949 B.C., a date fixed by Fo-lin (Hōrin),<sup>17</sup> the Chinese priest (A.D. 572–640). It should be needless to observe that in our day, few people, even among the followers of these sects, believe the legend.

The late Hakuju Ui fixed the date of the Buddha at 466–386 B.C., adopting legends set forth in the Sanskrit, Tibetan and Chinese versions of Buddhist scriptures, such as the Sama-yabheda-uparacana-cakra. Because the date of King Aśoka, the starting point for chronological investigations, should be altered in the light of recent research, H. Nakamura proposed that H. Ui's chronology should be modified to 463–383 B.C., following him on the main points of his studies.<sup>18</sup>

Studies by Genmyō Ono and Hakuju Ui exerted influence on Chinese scholars. Rev. Yin-shun, the Chinese scholar and priest, criticizing the dates of the Buddha adopted by Western and South Asiatic scholars, set the date of the Parinirvāṇa as 390 B.C. The reasons are not much different from those by Ui.<sup>19</sup>

Representing the most moderate opinion of European scholarship, the late M. Winternitz said, "When we take into consideration that there is sufficient evidence to show that the Buddha was a contemporary of King Bimbisāra and Ajātaśatru, whom we can place with a fair amount of certainty in the sixth and fifth centuries B.C., then we are at least justified in saying that the best working hypothesis is to place the life of Buddha into this period also."<sup>20</sup> However, we are thus placed in an awkward position, since the dates of these kings cannot be fixed unless we can make sure of the date of the Buddha.

Kanakura<sup>21</sup> adopts the view of the late Jacobi, who fixed the death-year of the Buddha as 484 B.C., in support of the southern tradition. Midzuno doubts the authenticity of the northern legend that Aśoka appeared about one hundred year after the death of the Buddha, <sup>16</sup> H. Ui: ITK. vol. 2, Tokyo, Kōshisha, 1926, pp. 1–112. He strongly pointed out the inconsistency of the Southern legend, and introduced the fact that the Northern tradition was widely adopted by many sects, both Hinayāna and Mahāyāna.

and adopts the southern tradition.<sup>22</sup> Representatives of Japanese Buddhists participated in the 2,500th anniversary which was held by southern Buddhists in A.D. 1956. They held another 2,500th anniversary in A.D. 1959, sponsored by the government of Japan in order to promote friendly relations with Asian Buddhists. However, this does not mean that the Japanese have adopted the Singhalese chronology.<sup>23</sup>

Ceylon has preserved several chronicles which are very important for the study of history of India and that of Indian Buddhism.<sup>24</sup>

Many important facts which contribute to an understanding of the social and historical background of early Buddhism have been brought to light by Japanese scholars, by utilizing Jain materials and other non-Buddhist sources in close comparison with Buddhist literature. These scholars have clarified the actual role of the traders and craftsmen, among whom the newly arisen Buddhist and Jain movements had gained a hearing.<sup>25</sup> Gahapati was a title of a community leader with properties; and śreṣṭhin was the head of a guild, just like the alderman in the West.<sup>26</sup> Buddhism spread along trade routes.<sup>27</sup>

There are numerous Buddha legends conveyed in various languages.<sup>2</sup> Mythological and miraculous elements were gradually added to Buddha biographies with the lapse of time.<sup>3</sup>

The descriptions of the life of the Buddha in the Saṅghabhedavastu of the Sarvāstivādins are a bit more exaggerative and hyperbolic than casual references in the Pali Nikayas, but quite realistic when compared with those in later Sanskrit works on the life of the Buddha.<sup>3'</sup> The Mahāvastu, in which the life of Gotama Buddha is extolled, was the turning point to Mahāyāna, and set forth the idea of saṃbhoga-kāya and of the Original Vow.<sup>4</sup>

Careful attention to the literary form of early Buddhist scriptures has made possible a critical reconstruction of the manner in which stories told about the Buddha developed from generation to generation. Based on the results of recent critical textual studies, a biography of the Buddha has been written by the author himself, in which each event in his life was explained with reference to non-Buddhist materials, and in relation to the social background, as well as archaeological findings. To illustrate, there are twenty-two scenes representing stories from the Life of Buddha in bas-relief on the stūpa railings of Bharhut.<sup>5</sup> Pieces of fine arts are helpful to get the picture of sociological, topological and ideological background of the days in which the Buddha lived.<sup>5'</sup> The works in the future should make careful separation of early and late materials.<sup>6</sup>

ticed cross-cousin marriage and this can be noticed with regard to the genealogy of the Buddha.<sup>8</sup>

The site of Kapilavastu, their capital, has been identified by modern archaeologists at a location at Tilaurakot in modern Padaria in the Tarai basin in the central part of southern Nepal.<sup>9</sup>

However, in recent years archaeologists of India excavated at Piprahwa, and judging from findings there they assert that Piprahwa must be the site of ancient Kapilavastu. Decision should be made after further investigations. According to a later legend, the Buddha, about to descend from the Tusita heaven to be born, looked and decided upon the time, place, country, class, race and parents fit for his birth.<sup>10</sup> Legend has it that the baby was poured water by nāgas.<sup>11</sup> The rite of pouring the water of nectar (amṛta) on the standing figure of the baby Śākyamuni is based upon the idea of purification or consecration.<sup>12</sup> The verse claimed to have been proclaimed by the Buddha at his birth was composed very late.<sup>13</sup>

He was not satisfied with the regal pomposity and sumptuous life he led as the crown prince at the royal court. He was obsessed with difficult problems of human life. At the age of twenty nine, he made up his mind to retire from the world to seek for ultimate deliverance; and secretly leaving his home in the palace, he became a recluse.<sup>14</sup>

Legend has it that Gotama paid visits to Ājāra Kālāma and Uddaka Rāmaputta, the former advocating the State of Non-Existence and the latter advocating the State of Thoughtless Thought. However, these two States seem to represent two stages in the process of the origination of Buddhist meditations. It is likely that the scheme of the Four Arūpa Dhātu Meditations was formed in later days. Unfortunately the thoughts of the Hermits Ājāra Kālāma and Uddaka Rāmaputta are almost unidentifiable today.<sup>14'</sup> There is an assertion that this course of life in seeking for the Truth should be investigated from the standpoint of comparative religion.<sup>15</sup>

During his sojourn in Vaiśālī, in the Cāpāla shrine, the Buddha gave a hint to Ānanda that the latter should beg the Lord to remain during the aeon. But as the heart of Ānanda was possessed by the Evil Māra, he did not beg the Lord to exercise this power. The Buddha deliberately rejected the rest of his natural term of life.<sup>31</sup>

Thus the Buddha promised the Māra there that after the period of three months he would pass away. Owing to the food<sup>32</sup> offered by Cunda, the blacksmith, he became ill, suffering from indigestion. At the advanced age of eighty he died at Kuśinagarī. After his death, his ashes were divided into eight portions for distribution.<sup>33</sup> For the legends in the Mahā-parinibbāna-suttanta there must have been some historical facts relevant to Gotama Śākya-muni.<sup>34</sup>

Scenes of the life of the Buddha are represented in the reliefs at Sāñcī and Nāgārjunikunda.<sup>35</sup>

Owing to various personal reasons disciples of the Buddha took order.<sup>36</sup>

Among the disciples of the Buddha, Sāriputta<sup>37</sup> and Mahā-moggallāna,<sup>38</sup> who previously had been the topmost disciples of Sañjaya, the sceptic, at Rājagṛha, the capital of Magadha, were respected as the two greatest disciples of the Buddha after their conversion.<sup>39</sup> However, it was Mahākaccāyana who assumed the greatest role in the history of early Buddhist missions.<sup>40</sup> The Pūrṇavadāna is the most detailed biography of Pūrṇa.<sup>41</sup> Ānanda, Gotama's favorite disciple, was rather on the side of the progressives or liberals, who increased in number in later Buddhism.<sup>42</sup> Aṅgulimāla was a robber who killed men; but having seen the Buddha, he was converted and finally enlightened.<sup>43</sup> Dabba-Mallaputta was in charge of the accommodation of the order.<sup>44</sup>

There were also rebellious monks in the Order. Their protests against the disciplinary measures adopted by the Buddha are widely scattered in the Pali texts.<sup>46</sup> Although there were some dissenters as were represented by Devadatta, Buddhism made a steady spread and development with the lapse of time.<sup>47</sup> The followers of Devadatta, who made a revolt against Gotama Buddha, still remained within the pail of Buddhism. They were Buddhists who did not obey Śākyamuni.<sup>48</sup>

3.A. The Gradual Development of the Scriptures<sup>3</sup>

It is likely that Śākyamuni used several languages for spreading his teaching.<sup>4</sup> But as the scripture of early Buddhism nowadays only the Pali Tripiṭaka has been preserved in organized form. Pali is a sort of Prakrit.<sup>5</sup> Some Pali words were coined out of Prakrit

Good outlines of early Buddhism are:

<sup>3</sup> "In Christian circles, Rudolf Bultmann of Marburg has done a creative piece of work, proceeding in much the same fashion as you have done. He has dealt critically with the New Testament and succeeded in showing the cultural influences point by point. He then proceeded to extract what he calls the Kerygma or original essence of the Gospel. The last step is to restate the Kerygma in terms of contemporary existentialist thought, using Heidegger as his model. I think the kind of studies you are pursuing in textual and historical analysis is analogous to the first stage of Bultmann's process."—A comment by Prof. Harry Buck in his letter of July 29, 1959 to the author.

<sup>5</sup> Studies in the Pali scriptures have kept pace with other developments. In this field, Japanese scholars are well equipped and talented, and some of their most significant contributions have been in the criticism of early Buddhist scriptures. In recent years, many scholars in Japan have participated in this work.

saṃgīti.<sup>12</sup> It is believed among the Theravādins of South Asiatic countries that since the Third Council the Pali Tripiṭaka has been transmitted without change up to this day. The writer of this article generally avoids the use of the word Hīnayāna which might be disagreeable to Southern Buddhists. Instead the terms “Conservative Buddhism” (or Older Buddhism) and “Theravāda” are used. The former is of wider application, substantially the same as “Hīnayāna”, whereas the latter is of narrower application, i.e., one school of the former.

A few Pali texts were translated into Chinese.<sup>13</sup> Besides Pali texts there exist some scriptures of early Buddhism in Gandhārī, a dialect of Northwestern India.<sup>14</sup> Buddhist texts in Sanskrit had been used in Ceylon during the Anurādha period. A number of passages from Buddhist Sanskrit works have been translated into Pali and included in works of Pali literature. (Sections of the Anavatapta-gāthā, a Buddhist Sanskrit text of the Sarvāstivāda school, have been inserted in the Apadāna and the Nettipakaraṇa.)<sup>15</sup>

In the past there existed many Sanskrit texts of the scriptures of early Buddhism; they were translated into Chinese<sup>16</sup> on the large scale, and many still exist; whereas most of the Sanskrit originals have been lost. In some monasteries in Kathmandu there have been preserved a great number of manuscripts of Buddhist texts, many of which have not yet been published.<sup>17</sup> Some libraries in Japan also keep Sanskrit manuscripts.<sup>18</sup> But they are chiefly of Mahāyāna.

The Chinese versions<sup>19</sup> in general were not always translated literally and faithfully to the Indian originals, but were very often twisted in such a way to create an appeal to the Chinese in general. The imperfect character of Chinese versions was taken notice of already in the past by Yen-tsung (彦琮) who esteemed Sanskrit originals.<sup>20</sup>

In the Chinese versions,<sup>21</sup> especially those ancient ones before the Tang period, Confucian and Taoistic influences are conspicuously evident; there are even some interpolations for the purpose of expounding these two philosophies.<sup>22</sup> Moreover, in the Chinese Tripiṭaka in general, there are many sūtras which were composed by the Chinese in Chinese.<sup>23</sup> A few manuscripts of the scriptures of early Buddhism have been found in the ruins in Central Asia.<sup>24</sup>

In the Tibetan Tripiṭaka also, there exist versions of some canonical works of early Buddhism.<sup>25</sup>

These scriptures—Pali, Sanskrit, Tibetan and Chinese—were all compiled in later days; and consequently, we must sort out the older and newer portions in each corpus of the scriptures. Some Western scholars tried to identify passages of the proto-canon (Urkanon) by means of pointing out eastern (or Magadhian) elements in early Pali texts.<sup>26</sup> The earlier portions of the Pali scriptures have been classified in several groups according to their chronological order:<sup>27</sup>

1. Pārāyana (of the Suttanipāta)
2. a. The first four vaggas of the Suttanipāta, and the first Sagāthavagga of the Samyutta-nikāya
- b. Itivuttaka, Udāna
- c. The first eight vaggas of Nidāna-samyutta of the Samyuttanikāya II and Vedalla, as was mentioned by Buddhaghosa; i.e. MN. Nos. 9, 21, 43, 44, 109, 110; DN. No. 21.
3. The twenty-eight Jātakas which are found at Bharhut and Abbhutadhamma, as was mentioned by Buddhaghosa; i.e., AN. IV, No. 127, 128, 129, 130, (Vol. II, pp. 130–133); VIII, Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23; MN. 123 (Vol. III, p. 118 f.)

Some verses of the Sagātha-vagga have features more archaic than those of the Suttanipāta.<sup>28</sup> Generally speaking, gāthās were composed earlier, but there are some exceptions.<sup>29</sup> Gāthās were not composed at the same time. Alsdorf made an approach to sort out earlier and later ones among them.<sup>29'</sup>

The next step of approach in classifying them must be as follows: Even in the later layers of Buddhist scriptures, some ancient verses or “stock expressions” can be found. Hence, later scriptures may occasionally contain early materials; and a simple classification setting forth a chronology of large blocks of literature is inadequate. Criticism must proceed verse by verse and phrase by phrase, with careful attention to the linguistic and metrical peculiarities of the literature being studied. For this purpose, H. Nakamura established forty-nine criteria to determine which material is early and which represents a later stage of development. He has also given examples of the application of his principles (e.g., if a Rgvedic ending is found in a verse, it may be regarded as of early origin, although this is only one criterion.<sup>30</sup>) In view of Nakamura’s studies, it would seem that Ui’s main conclusions should be accepted.

There have been found parallels in non-Buddhist literature with many verses of the Suttanipāta, and this approach was able to show that, at the outset, Buddhism had little in the way of a distinctive diction or a mode of expression.<sup>31</sup>

Examining the seven sūtras<sup>32</sup> mentioned in an edict of Aśoka, we are led to the conclusion that the corpus of the scriptures of early Buddhism was not yet fixed in its present state.<sup>33</sup>

At first the teachings of the Buddha were comprised and conveyed in the form of 9 aṅgas<sup>34</sup> or 12 aṅgas.<sup>35</sup> The process of the formalization of the 12 aṅgas can be divided into the following three stages:<sup>36</sup>

1. The first stage: the former five of the 9 aṅgas. (i.e., sutta,<sup>37</sup> geyya,<sup>38</sup> veyyākaraṇa,<sup>39</sup> gāthā, udāna<sup>40</sup>)

2. The Second stage: the latter four of the 9 aṅgas. (i.e., itivuttaka,<sup>41</sup> jātaka, vedalla,<sup>42</sup> abbhutadhamma)

3. The third stage: the three aṅgas peculiar to the form of the 12 aṅgas. (nidāna, avadāna,<sup>43</sup> upadeśa<sup>44</sup>)

<sup>32</sup> The seven dhammapaliyāyāni were discussed by Keishō Tsukamoto, Bukkyō Kenkyū, No. 1, Dec. 1970, 29–47.

Vyākaraṇa in the Mahāvastu was discussed by Ryūjun Fujimura, IBK. vol. XX, No. 1, Dec. 1971, 429–435.

There are several Chinese equivalents of Pali veyyākaraṇa. (Takeo Warita, IBK. vol. XX, No. 2, March 1972, 138–139.)

<sup>43</sup> avadāna is an explanation of the process of seeing Buddhas and accumulating good merits by a Truth-Seeker in his previous lives to attain enlightenment in a later life. (Kanga Takabatake, IBK. III, 1, p. 333 f.) Six avadānas are mentioned in the Mahāprajñāpāramitā-sūtra-upadeśa, vol. 1. They have to be regarded as the best known ones in those days. They correspond to the Mahāpadāna-suttanta, in the Dīghanikāya, the 長寿王本起經, No. 72 of the Chinese Madhyamāgamasūtra (Taisho, vol. 1, p. 532 f.), kāmāvadāna (not identified), the story of Soṇakuṭikaṇṇa (Vinaya, vol. 1, p. 182 etc.), Bodhisattvāvadāna (Cullavagga VII, vol. 2, p. 201 etc.). <sup>44</sup> Egaku Mayeda, IBK. IV, 1, p. 114 f.

The form paryāya also was a pre-sutta form of some canonical passage.<sup>45</sup> We can enumerate various forms of paryāya.

Among the bas-reliefs of Bharhut stūpa eighteen are carved with the name of 'Jātaka'. By the comparison of the eighteen Jātakas with records in Buddhist literature, we find two remarkable characters among them. First: more moral significance is attached to them than to the stories in Buddhist literature. Second: there are few references to the previous existence of the Buddha, i.e. the Bodhisatta. It is likely that it was only in later days that these Jātakas or stories in these bas-reliefs were connected with his previous existence in the past life.<sup>46</sup>

All the Buddhist sūtras begin with the phrase: "Thus have I heard." The punctuation and interpretation by later Buddhists are wrong. Originally it meant: "Thus did I hear on one occasion (in the Buddha's career): he was dwelling at Rājagṛha, etc."<sup>47</sup> Based upon critical studies we can ascertain with much probability the thought and acts of Śākyamuni and his disciples. Studies along this line have been successful recently.<sup>48</sup>

3.B. The Corpus of the Transmitted Scriptures

The whole corpus of the Buddhist scripture is called the 'Three Baskets' (Tripitaka which include the Baskets (Piṭaka) of Vinaya, Sutta, and Abhidhamma. The Vinaya Piṭaka deals with the monastic rules and moral disciplines. The Sutta Piṭaka contains the discourses and popular teachings by the Buddha and his disciples. The Abhidhamma Piṭaka deals with the higher philosophy of the Buddhist teaching.

3.B.i. Sutta-piṭaka

The Pali Nikāyas and the Chinese Āgama-sūtras coincide with each other to a considerable degree.<sup>1</sup> The word 'āgama' originally means 'tradition, 'a traditional doctrine', and then 'a sacred work'.<sup>2</sup> There have been found some fragments of Sanskrit Āgama-sūtras.<sup>3</sup>

It is likely that the four Nikāyas were compiled simultaneously after the reign of king Aśoka.<sup>4</sup>

In the Sarvāstivāda-vinaya-vibhāṣā the purpose of compiling the scriptures in the four groups is described:

"The sermons which were delivered according to occasions for the sake of gods and people were compiled in the Ekottarāgama. This is what preachers esteem.

For intelligent persons profound doctrines were set forth. They were compiled in the Madhyamakāgama. This is what scholars (lit. 'those who learn') esteem.

Various kinds of meditation were set forth. They were compiled in the Samyuktāgama. This is what meditation-practitioners esteem.

To refute various heterodoxies is the purpose of the Dirghāgama".<sup>5</sup>

This classical remark seems to have got the point. In the preface of the Chinese version of the Dirghāgamasūtra it is said: "Various ways of practice are analysed and expounded in long passages. That is why many long (dirgha) sūtras are incorporated in this scripture."<sup>6</sup> The Pali Dīghanikāya also must have compiled long suttas for the same reason. There is an opinion<sup>7</sup> that the Dīghanikāya contains the oldest teachings in the Suttapiṭaka. However, according to the criteria<sup>8</sup> which distinguish between old and new layers in the scriptures,

The structure of the Sagātha-vagga of SN. was investigated by Zennō Ishigami, (Sankō Annual, No. 1, 1966, 185–263.)

The number of the Suttas of the Samyutta-nikāya was discussed by Mitsuyoshi Saigusa, Shūkyō Kenkyū, No. 192, Sept. 1967, 1–32.

Some scenes of the life of the Buddha as are revealed in the Sagāthavagga of SN. are discussed by Zennō Ishigami, Sankō Bunka Kenkyūsho Kiyō, No. 3, 1970, 41–68.

<sup>24</sup> 雜阿含經, 50 vols., translated into Chinese by Guṇabhadra in 435–443 A.D. This was translated into Japanese by B. Shiido in KIK. Agonbu, vols. 1–3. The Chinese version was carefully examined by him in collation with the Pali text. A detailed comparative list is published in KIK. Agonbu, vol. 1, pp. 325–427.

The Chinese version of the Minor Samyukta-āgama was discussed by Kōgen Midzuno, IBK. vol. XVIII, No. 2, March 1970, 41–51.

Samyuktāgama is certainly one by An Shih-kao.<sup>26</sup> Some teachings of the Samyutta-nikāya can be traced to the Bṛhadāraṇyaka-upaniṣad.<sup>27</sup> The Samyuktāgama contains numerous passages which can be regarded as the beginning of abhidharma.<sup>28</sup>

It is doubtless that the Sagātha-vagga of the Samyutta-Nikāya came into existence very early. This can be evidenced by means of many criteria. Moreover, a verse of the Sagātha-vagga is cited and commented on in the Āṅguttara-Nikāya (vol. V, p. 46) as follows:

Vuttam idam bhante Bhagavatā Kumāripaṇhesu:
Atthassa pattim hadayassa santim.

The phrase cited here is found in the Sagāthavagga (SN. vol. I, p. 126). (The section in which this phrase is found is entitled dhitaro).

Before the compilation of the Samyuktāgama some portions of this scripture were current as independent sutras. For example, the 七處三觀經 which discusses the situation of an individual existence, the 五陰譬喻經 which sets forth transitoriness of pañcaskandha, the Dharmacakrapravartana-sutra, and the 八正道經 which discusses the Eightfold Right Way, etc.<sup>29</sup>

The Pali Dhammacakkapavattana-sutta is very important as the text conveying the first sermon of the Buddha, and has been read throughout all the Buddhist world.<sup>29'</sup>

(4) Āṅguttara-nikāya.<sup>29''</sup> It was formerly admitted that the Sanskrit original of the sion of the Samyuktāgama critically and translated it into Japanese. (KIK. Agonbu, vol. 1, Introduction).

There are three Chinese versions. An-shih-kao's oldest version was translated into Japanese by Hakuju Ui (Yakukyōshi Kenkyū, op. cit., pp. 335–339). All the extant versions were investigated in collation (Kōgen Midzuno, Bukkyō Kenkyū, (published by The International Buddhist Association), No. 1, Dec. 1970, pp. 92–114.

Chinese version<sup>30</sup> of the Ekottarāgama-sūtra<sup>31</sup> was composed in the period between the 2nd century and the beginning of the 4th century A.D.<sup>32</sup> However, there is an opinion that it is likely that the Pali text of the Āṅguttara-nikāya was composed probably in the reign of Menander, 1st B.C., and that the Chinese version, which mentions the words, Mahāyāna, dharmakāya, and deprecates Hīnayāna, must have been composed after the rise of Mahāyāna, probably in the 2nd or 3rd century A.D.<sup>33</sup> The sect to which the Ekottarāgama belonged is not clear.<sup>34</sup> The Tshikḥu-sānkwān-ching (七処三觀經) in 2 vols. translated by An Shih-kao is another version of the one of the Ekottarāgama.<sup>35</sup>

The Manorathapūraṇi (Āṅguttara-aṭṭhakathā), the Pali commentary must have been composed prior to 400 A.D.<sup>35'</sup>

It is likely that the four Nikāyas were composed about the same period<sup>36</sup> after Aśoka.<sup>37</sup>

(5) Khuddaka-nikāya. In the Chinese Tripiṭaka or in the Tibetan Tripiṭaka there exists no scripture which corresponds to the Pali Khuddaka-Nikāya, the fifth Nikāya, as a whole. However, in Tibet a scripture called "Kṣudrāgama" was known, and its sentences were also known.<sup>38</sup> As the appellation Pañca-nikāya is mentioned in Pali literature and the term Pañcanaikāyika (in Sanskrit) is mentioned in ancient inscriptions, a Nikāya called Khuddaka-Nikāya which was a collection of some scriptures must have existed very early.

This Nikāya was composed in the form as it is now after King Aśoka.<sup>39</sup>

In south India there was a different opinion about the contents of the Khuddaka-Nikāya, according to which the Khuddaka-Nikāya comprised the whole of the Vinaya-piṭaka, the whole of the Abhidhamma-piṭaka and all suttas except the Four Nikāyas.<sup>39'</sup> This opinion involves that the Five Nikāyas correspond to the Three Tipiṭakas.

Verses of this scripture often use Vedic technical terms, such as puja, huta, atta etc., which means that these verses represent the transient stage from the Vedic religion to the formation of new technical terms.<sup>42'</sup> Some verses resort to enigmatic expressions conveying secret teachings (abhisandhi, e.g. verses 294; 295).<sup>42''</sup>

Part of Suttanipāta is commented upon in Niddesa. Cf. s.v. Niddesa.

The fact that the Suttanipāta is a very old text was pointed out by scholars. (Fausböll, SBE. vol. X, p. xi: H. Oldenberg: Buddha, S. 232, Anm. 2.) Oldenberg proved it by means of meters and forms of expression. (Aus dem alten Indien, S. 36.)

Dhammapada and the Udāna with some verses from the Sagātha-vagga of the Samyutta-nikāya and from the Suttanipāta in Pali. There is a legend that the Udānavarga was compiled by Dharmatrāta, a contemporary of king Kaniska. The phu-yao-ching (出曜經 30 vols.) and the Fa-tsi-yao-sunching (法集要頌經 4 vols., verses alone)<sup>48</sup> are considered to be Chinese translations of this text, which corresponds to the Dhammapada of other sects.

Legend has it that 出曜經 translated into Chinese by Buddhasmṛti, was composed by Dharmatrāta who lived about 300 years after the death of the Buddha. This is earlier than the Dhammapadatthakathā of Buddhaghosa.

The Tibetan version of the Udānavarga has been transmitted.<sup>49</sup>

The Tocharian version<sup>49'</sup> was found and also Tocharian guide-book to Dharmatrāta's Udānavarga, which is entitled the 'Udānālaṅkāra'.<sup>50</sup>

(c) Udāna.<sup>51</sup>

In the extant Pali text of the Udāna those phrases as are cited as udāna are old, and stories were added later.<sup>52</sup>

G. C. Pande (Study in the Origins of Buddhism, p. 35) thinks that the Mahāvagga is the latest portion. Anyhow, Fausböll's opinion that the Mahāvagga is the oldest section is now untenable.

Text-critical problems pertaining to the Suttanipāta were discussed by Hajime Nakamura in detail (Genshi Bukkyō no Shisō), vol. 2, pp. 444-449).

The Northern version of this text, i.e., the Sanskrit Itivṛttaka (本事經), was compiled by the Sarvāstivādins, and sets forth a worldly ethics, which is not found in the Pali version.<sup>55</sup>

This text as a whole is a very old one. It is likely that parts of this text came into existence chronologically in the following order:<sup>57</sup>

- I. Pārāyana.
- II. Atthaka-vagga.
- III. Mahāvagga.<sup>58</sup>
- IV. Other chapters. (They are mixtures of older and later layers).<sup>59</sup>

Among the sections of this text, the Atthaka-vagga and the Pārāyana-vagga are very old ones; it is likely that they existed even in the lifetime of Gotama Buddha.

In these two we notice various Vedic or Brahmanistic and Jain features and wording (grammatical formations and vocabulary) which can not be traced in later Buddhist literature.<sup>60</sup>

The Pārāyana-vagga and the Atthaka-vagga are already cited and commented upon in suttas themselves as authoritative teachings.<sup>61</sup>

The title of the original of the Chinese version (義足經)<sup>62</sup> must have been Arthavarga or

The Suttanipāta is quite unique in describing the earliest stage of Buddhism when monks spent their lives as hermits prior to the days of monasteries, and philosophical speculations were barred (especially in the Aṭṭhakavagga), representing the stage prior to the formation of elaborate systems by Ābhidharmika scholars.

prototypes were quite different from the existing ones in content and form.<sup>70</sup>

At first canonical verse-Jātakas existed.<sup>71</sup>

In Jātakas there is a verse-type called 'Old Āryā'.<sup>72</sup>

Not all the Jātakas, however, were received into the canon when the work of combining them in the form of a canon began. Most of the Jātakas were based on popular stories current among common people then; it is natural that between Jātaka stories and Epic stories there are many similarities.<sup>73</sup>

Animal-tales existed before Buddhism. However, no deliberate effort was made to adopt the animal tales as a device to instruct any moral in the pre-Buddha period.<sup>74</sup> They were transformed to suit moral instructions by Buddhism.

The bodhisattva idea was fused later into Jātaka stories.<sup>75</sup>

Earlier Jātakas are represented on the ancient reliefs on the stone railings of Bharhut Stūpa, Bodh-Gayā<sup>76</sup> and those on the stone gateways at Sānchī; their careful investigations made it clear that most Jātakas and similar stories appeared after them.<sup>77</sup> The Jātakas were very important in the spiritual life of South Asiatics. They were translated even into the language of the Mons along the sea-coast of Southern Burma.<sup>78</sup> Some of them were current in Central Asia also.<sup>79</sup>

The Samantapāsādikā is a commentary on the Pali Vinaya; the Chinese 善見律毘婆沙<sup>17</sup> is a text corresponding to it.<sup>18</sup>

The Bahirnidāna of the Samantapāsādikā was translated into English. (N. A. Jayawickrama: The Inception of Discipline and the Vinaya Nidāna. Sacred Books of the Buddhists, vol. XXI. London, Luzac, 1962. (Reviewed by A. Bareau, JAOS, vol. 83, 1963, 258–259.)

It is likely that the author of the Samantapāsādikā was not the author of the Sumaṅgalavitāsini.

The introductory portion of the Samantapāsādikā, which sets forth historical description, seems to have been modified by later writers, and not to have derived from Buddhaghosa. Hubert Durt in Trans. ICO, No. VI, 1961, pp. 124–127 (in French). His studies are greatly based on those by Japanese scholars.

<sup>18</sup> Makoto Nagai: Butten, p. 67, f. Buddhaghosa's Samantapāsādikā was edited by Junjirō Takakusu, Makoto Nagai, and Kōgen Midzuno, 7 vols. The Pali Text Society, London, 1924–1947. Its introductory part was translated into Japanese by Makoto Nagai in an appendix to his Butten, p. 3 f. The 善見律毘婆沙 18 vols. (Taishō, vol. 24 No. 1462), is an incomplete Chinese translation by Saṅghabhadra of the Samantapāsādikā. (Makoto Nagai: Butten, p. 1 ff.) There are some differences between these two. (Midzuno: Bukkyō Kenkyū, I, 3, p. 77 f.)

The Shan-Chien-P'i-P'o-Sha (善見律毘婆沙) was translated into Japanese by Makoto Nagai in KIK. Ristubu XVIII.

Shan-Chien-P'i-P'o-Sha. A Chinese Version by Saṅghabhadra of Samantapāsādikā, Commentary on Pali Vinaya. Translated into English for the first time. By P. V. Bapat in collaboration with A. Hirakawa, Poona, Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, 1970. (All Chinese technical terms are mentioned with Pali equivalents.) Reviewed by Yenshō Kanakura, Suzuki Nenpō, No. 8, 1971, 92–93.

The Simālaṅkārasaṅgha, allegedly compiled by Vācissara (13th century), a Ceylonese monk, aims at introducing in abridged form the main teachings on the subject of simā, a demarcated area.

Discussed by Jothiya Dhirasekera, Bukkyō Kenkyū, No. 1, 1970, 76–73 (in English).

This Sanskrit text and its Tibetan version in collation with Kumārajīva's Chinese version were examined and translated into Japanese by Shinya Masuda (増田臣也『梵文波羅提木叉經』一卷,『西藏文波羅提木叉經』一卷, Nakayama Shobō, Nov. 1969).

(4) Manuscript Remains etc. by A. F. Hoernle, Oxford, 1916, pp. 4–16. Hirakawa found a passage similar to the first leaf in the Daśabhāṅavāra-vinaya, vol. 57, Taishō, vol. 23, p. 419 bc. The third leaf seems to be a sort of gloss on the Daśabhāṅavāra.

(5) Fragments found in Qyzil, Nartaf. E. Waldschmidt: Bruchstücke des Überlieferung des Bhikṣuṇī-prātimokṣa in den verschiedenen Schulen, Leipzig, 1929. His identifications are acknowledged by Hirakawa.

<sup>24</sup> The five big Vinayas preserved in the Chinese Tripitaka were critically examined by Akira Hirakawa, and the results are as follows (Ritsuzō):

(1) 十誦律 (Daśabhāṅgavāra-vinaya), 61 vols. (Taishō, vol. 23, No. 1435). First translated by Puṇyatara, Kumārajīva and Dharmaruci, and finally revised by Vimalākṣa. The date of translation was 404–409 A.D. The Chinese technical terms fixed in this version were later inherited by the versions of other Vinayas. (Translated into Japanese by Tenzui Uyeda in KIK. Ristubu, V–VII). The bhikṣuṇī-prātimokṣa of this vinaya was found in Tun-huang. (R. Nishimoto, in Buttan, p. 797 ff.). In the passage of 七滅諍法 of this vinaya, the 20th chuan, must be some preposterous confusion. (Satō in IBK. vol. 2, p. 227. ff.)

In the translation workshop of Kumārajīva manuscripts of preliminary translation were not kept in secret. A manuscript of preliminary translation of Daśa-bhāṅga-vāra-vinaya by him was found in Tun-huang. Akira Hirakawa in Iwai Comm. Vol., pp. 545–551.

(2) 四分律 (Dharmaguptaka-vinaya), first in 45 vols. and later in 60 vols. (Taishō, vol. 22, No. 1428). Translated jointly by Buddhayaśas and Buddhasmṛti etc. The work of translation was begun in 410 and ended in 412 A.D. (Translated into Japanese by Kōyō Sakaino, KIK. Ritsubu I-IV.)

(3) 摩訶僧祇律 (Mahāsaṅghika-vinaya), 40 vols. (Taishō, vol. 22, No. 1425). Translated jointly by Buddhābhadrā and Fa-hien. The work of translation began in 416 and ended in 418 A.D. (Translated into Japanese by Ryūzan Nishimoto in KIK. Ritsubu, VIII-XI.)

(4) 彌沙塞和醯五分律 (Mahisāsakavinaya), 30 vols. (Taishō, vol. 22, No. 1421). Translated by Buddhajīva, 道生 and 慧嚴. The work of translation began in 422 and ended in 423 A.D. (Translated into Japanese by Ryūzan Nishimoto, in KIK. Ritsubu, XIII-XIV.)

(5) The Vinaya of the Mūlasarvāstivādins, Nos. 1442, 1443, 1444, 1445, 1446, 1447 (in Taishō, vol. 23); Nos. 1448-1459. They were all translated by I-tsing in between 703-713 A.D. They amount to 18 works in 199 vols. The biggest Vinaya. Most of them were translated into Japanese by Ryūzan Nishimoto in KIK. Ritsubu, XIX-XXVI, as follows:

根本說一切有部	毘奈耶 (No. 1442) XIX-XXI
"	苾芻尼毘奈耶 (No. 1443) XXII
"	毘奈耶出家事 (No. 1444) XXII

"	毘奈耶隨意事 (No. 1446) XXII

"	毘奈耶羯恥那衣事 (No. 1449) XXII
"	毘奈耶破僧事 (No. 1450) XXIV

The Sanskrit originals of some of these texts were published recently:

The Gilgit Manuscript of the Saṅghabhedavastu. Being the 17th and Last Section of the Vinaya of the Mūlasarvāstivādin. Edited by Raniero Gnoli with the Assistance of T. Venkatacharya. Roma: Istituto Italiano per il Medio ad Estremo Oriente, Part I, 1977; Part II, 1978. (This work was sponsored by the Department of Archaeology of Pakistan and IsMEO.)

The Gilgit manuscript of the Śayanāsanavastu and the Adhikaraṇavastu. Being the 15th and 16th Sections of the Vinaya of the Mūlasarvāstivādin. Edited by Raniero Gnoli. Roma: IsMEO, 1978. (This work was sponsored by the Department of Archaeology of Pakistan and IsMEO.)

There are nine versions, in all, of the karma-vācānā (kammavācā) of the Mūlasarvāstivādin Vinaya describing pravrajyā and upasampadā. Among them the Tibetan version is most perfect. (Hajime Sakurabe in IBK. vol. XII, No. 2, March 1964, pp. 14-25.)

Besides the above-mentioned works, the following are noteworthy:

薩婆多毘尼毘婆沙 (Sarvāstivāda-vinaya-vibhāṣā), Taishō, No. 1440, whose translator is not known. Explanations on the Vinaya. Translated into Japanese by Kōyō Sakaino and Mitsuo Satō, in KIK. Ritsubu, 15; 16.

薩婆多毘尼摩得勒伽 (Sarvāstivāda-nikāya-mātrkā?), Taishō, No. 1441, translated into Chinese by Saṅghavarman. This was made upon the 十誦律 (supra, n. 11). Translated into Japanese by Mitsuo Satō, in KIK. Ritsubu, vol. 16.

根本薩婆多部律掇 (Sarvāstivāda-vinaya-saṃgraha), 14 vols. Taishō, No. 1458. Translated into Chinese by I-tsing in 700 A.D. This is a compendium of Bhikkhu's Vinaya. It is said that this was composed by Jinamitra. This was translated into Japanese by Kōyō Sakaino, in KIK. Ritsubu, vol. 17.

The Vinayasamgraha of the Mūlasarvāstivādins was composed by Viśeṣamitra (or Jinamitra?), according to the Tibetan version. (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 525 a- 617 a. Discussed by Kyōgo Sasaki, Okuda Comm. Vol., pp. 987-1000.)

According to Hirakawa's critical investigation, there have been preserved only two Vinaya texts which were translated into Chinese prior to the translation of the Daśabhāṇavāra-vinaya, i.e. (1) 鼻奈耶 (Vinaya), 10 vols. (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 851 f.), tr. by Buddhasmṛti in 383 A.D. This contains explanations of prātimokṣa. (2) The Chinese versions of a prātimokṣa found in Tun-huang. (Published by Keiki Yabuki, Meisha Yoin 鳴沙餘韻, 1937, fol. 39-41.) This belonged to the Sarvāstivādins. Hirakawa made clear that this was translated into Chinese in between 265-360 A.D. (cf. Ryūzan Nishimoto in KIK. Ritsubu, 19, Introd. p. 12.)

Other Vinaya texts were translated later than the Daśabhāṇavāra-vinaya. The 犯戒罪報輕重經, 1 vol. (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 910 f.), ascribed to An Shih-kao, was not translated by him, but was composed in China, based upon the 目連問戒律中五百輕重事經, vol. 1 (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 972 c; p. 984 a.).

The 大比丘三千威儀, 2 vols. (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 912 f.) ascribed to An Shih-kao, either, was not translated by him, but later, approximately about the time when the Daśabhāṇavāra-vinaya was translated. (cf. K. Midzuno, fact that a great number of Tocharian manuscripts of the Disciplines found by Hoernle in Central Asia have been found to be of the Sarvāstivādins gives ample testimony that Hsuan-tsang reported that there existed many cloisters of that sect alone in some places there.<sup>25</sup>

Vinaya texts provide a great deal of materials for the study of cultural history.<sup>26</sup>

3.B.iii. Abhidhamma-piṭaka

This was composed much later, and will be discussed in the next chapter.

in S. Miyamoto's Daijō, p. 308.)

The 戒消災經 (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 945 a f.), ascribed to 支謙, was not translated by him, but was probably composed by the Chinese.

The 曇無德律部雜羯磨 (Taishō, vol. 22, p. 1041 f.), ascribed to Saṅghavarman, and the 羯磨, 1 vol. (Taishō No. 1433, vol. 22, p. 1051 f.), ascribed to 曇諦 (Dharmasatya from Persia), are nothing but excerpts from the Chinese version of the Dharmaguptaka-vinaya, and so they must have been composed by the Chinese. The 四分之比丘尼羯磨法, 1 vol., ascribed to Guṇavarman (Taishō, vol. 22, p. 1065 f.), is nothing but an excerpt from the 羯磨 ascribed to 曇諦. (Hirakawa: IBK, vol. 3, No. 2, 1955 p. 16 f.; Ryūzan Nishimoto: Shibunritsu Biku Kaihon Kōsan, p. 91; Enichi Ōchō: Chūgoku Bukkyō no Kenkyū, p. 26).

The 羯磨 ascribed to 曇諦, which is the karmavācā of the Dharmaguptakas, was translated into Japanese by Kōyō Sakaino, in KIK, Ritsubu, vol. 11.

The 弥沙塞五分戒本, 1 vol. (Taishō, vol. 22, p. 194 f.), ascribed to Buddhajīva etc. is nothing but an excerpt from the Chinese version of the Mahīśāsaka-vinaya.

The 優波離問經, 1 vol. (Upāli-paripṛcchā), (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 903 f.), ascribed to Guṇavarman, was not translated by him, but was translated approximately about the time when the Daśabhāṇavāra-vinaya was translated:

The 優婆塞五戒相經, 1 vol. (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 939 f.) is not a translation, but an excerpt from the Daśabhāṇavāra-vinaya. Makoto Nagai: Butten, p. 160 f.; 297 f.; Ohno: Kaikyō etc. p. 383.

The five texts 沙弥十戒法并威儀, 1 vol., 沙弥威儀, 1 vol., 沙弥十戒儀則經, 1 vol., 沙弥尼離戒文, 1 vol. (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 926 ff) are not translations, but compositions by the Chinese. (Ohno: op. cit., p. 390 f.). They have been influenced by the Mahāyāna śīlas to some extent. With regard to the first, second and fourth of the five, Hirakawa admits the possibility of their being translations.

With regard to other vinaya texts the ascriptions of translators set forth in the Chinese Tripiṭaka seem to be acceptable. (Hirakawa, op. cit.)

The P'i-ni-mou-ching (毘尼母經 Vinaya-māṭṛkā?), 8 vols. (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 801 f. No. 1463. Tr. into Japanese by Kōyō Sakaino, in KIK, XV.), seems to belong to the Dharmaguptakas. (Kōyō Sakaino's introd. to KIK, Ritsubu, 15). A. Hirakawa (op. cit., p. 263 f.) criticized this opinion. However there is an opinion that this text is likely to be part of the māṭṛkā of the Haimavata school. (Yenshō Kanakura in NBNG, vol. 25 for 1959, March 1960, pp. 129-152.)

解脫戒經, Taishō, No. 1460, translated by Prajñāruci into Chinese, is the Prātimokṣa-sūtra of the Kāśyapiyas. This was translated into Japanese by Ryūzan Nishimoto in KIK, Ritsubu, vol. 11.

律二十二明了論 (Vinaya-dvāvīṃśati-prasannārtha-śāstra?), Taishō, No. 1461, translated into Chinese by Paramārtha in 568 A.D., is a work of explanations on some points of the prātimokṣas of the Sāmmitīyas. This was translated into Japanese by Ryūzan Nishimoto in KIK, Ritsubu, vol. 11.

Part I Original Buddhism

4. Aspects of Original Buddhism

It is generally admitted that-early Buddhist philosophy is set forth in the Pāli Nikāyas and their corresponding Chinese texts. But the Pāli Nikāyas themselves consist of various earlier and later layers which are derived from different periods.

The Pali language was a language of West India, apparently that of Avanti where the school (Theravāda) had its main center in that country.

The Theravada Tripiṭaka, now preserved in the Pali language is certainly one of the most authentic, in the sense of trying to preserve the discourses of the Buddha in their wording as recognized probably before schisms.<sup>1</sup>

But in the Buddhist texts there is no word that can be traced with unquestionable authority to Gotama Śākyamuni as a historical personage, although there must be some sayings or phrases derived from him. So, selecting older parts among the voluminous scriptures of Early Buddhism, scholars of critical approach try to elucidate the true purport of the teachings of the Buddha, or what is closest to his virtual teachings.

In this sense we shall distinguish between I) Original Buddhism and II) Early Buddhism. The former can be known only from older portions of the Pali scriptures, whereas the latter can be known chiefly from the most portions of the Pali scriptures that are in common with Sanskrit and Chinese Āgamas.

According to text-critical studies it has been made clear that some poem (Gāthā) portions and some phrases represent earlier layers. They are Gāthās of the Suttanipāta (especially the Aṭṭhaka-vagga and the Pārāyana-vagga), of the Sagātha-vagga of the Samyutta-Nikāya, of the Itivuttakas, of some Jātakas, the Udānas in the scripture named the Udānas, and some Gāthās and sentences rewritten from Gāthās into prose. There must be some more. Based upon these portions of the scriptures we can construe aspects of original Buddhism. The picture which we can get therefrom is fairly different from that as we can get from the Pali scriptures in general.<sup>2</sup> That is to say, Buddhism as appears in earlier portions of the scriptures is fairly different from what is explained by many scholars as earlier Buddhism or primitive Buddhism. Main points are as follows:

(1) Those words or phrases which are regarded by scholars as peculiarly Buddhistic or what—are said to be technical terms of Buddhism are seldom noticed in earlier Gāthā portions.

(2) What might be called 'dogmas' of Buddhism are seldom taught. Dogmas (ditṭhi) of any religious or philosophical school are refuted. Rather sceptical attitude about dogmas is expressed. In this respect it was closer to the attitude of Sañjaya, the sceptic, and to the theory of naya (viewpoints) of early Jainism.

(3) A special kind of nuance which reminds us of later Buddhism is less; on the contrary those phrases and words which remind us of the Ājivaka religion and Jainism are often used. They are quite similar to those as are used in the edicts of King Aśoka. It means that many sentences in the prose sections of the Pali scriptures were fixed after the reign of King Aśoka.

(4) Buddhist recluses lived alone in solitude, chiefly in woods, forests, and caves. Some monks lived together with their fellow ascetics (sābrahmacarin<sup>3</sup>, sādhipihārin)<sup>4</sup>. But the common livelihood of monks in monasteries (vihāras), as was conspicuous in later days, is scarcely mentioned.

(5) The life of Buddhist ascetics in its incipient stage was fairly different from the monastic life of monks in later days. It was quite close to the life of hermits as is mentioned in great epics, such as the Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyaṇa. In these epics ascetics are mentioned as hermits (ṛṣis), and in Gāthās of earlier texts of early Buddhism. Buddhist recluses or hermits are also referred to as isis (The Pali form of the Sanskrit ṛṣis), whereas in the prose sections explaining Gāthās, the word isis disappears and the word bhikkhu is used in its place. Many Buddhist recluses lived in huts thatched with straw (kuṭi, kuṭikā). A monk said, "I should lie down with a roof of thatch, like others in comfort." (Theragathā 208). Another Buddhist recluse said,

"My hut was made of three palm leaves on the bank of the Ganges. My bowl was only a funeral pot, my robe a rag from a dust-heap." (Therag. 127)

"I made a small hut in the forest, and I am vigilant, zealous, attentive, mindful." (Therag. 59).

A monk named Sarabhaṅga said,

"Having broken off reeds with my hands, having made a hut, I dwelt there; therefore by common consent my name was Reed-breaker (=Sarabhaṅga)." (Therag. 487)

The Jātaka conveys a story that in the past hermits (isis) lived in thatched huts (pañña-kuṭi, assama) thatched with leaves. (Saṃyutta-Nikāya, vol. I, pp. 226–227, prose) The dwelling where Buddhist recluses lived were called assama. A very early poem which encourages donation of huts to recluses depicts the Buddhist life in a hut in its earliest stage:

"An intelligent person, even if of low birth, should embody forbearance and meekness, act rightfully, and worship holy persons. He should make a comfortable and pleasant huts (karaye assame ramme).

He should establish wells and springs in waste land, and roads in steep places, and give foods, beverages, foods to chew, clothes, beddings to rightful persons with faithful mind." (SN. I, p. 100 Gāthā).

The fact that early Buddhist recluses lived in huts can be evidenced from Jain sources also. Sāriputta, who was regarded as the representative ascetic of Buddhism by Jains, is said to have lived in a cosy abode (assama) (Isibhāsiyāim 38, 13).

Insofar as early poems (gāthās) go, the above-mentioned way of life was predominant, but in due course of time the assertion that recluses need not spend such an inconvenient life appeared among Buddhist recluses. One of the persons who made such a set-out seems to have been Sāriputta. His saying is conveyed in a Jain work:

“What use of forests and huts (assama) for the hero who has conquered his senses?
Wherever one feels happy, there one finds a forest.
That place is also his hermitage.

Medicines are useless for those whose diseases have been healed.

.....
For the one who has disciplined oneself well forests or treasures (in villages) are vain.
The whole (world) is for his meditation.” (Isibhāsiyaṃ 38, vv. 13–15)

Sāriputta asserted that ascetics need not necessarily live in forests or hermitages. Based upon such an assertion ascetics came to live in villages, and finally in monasteries. Recluses became monks.

The term vihāra is mentioned in the Suttanipāta only once (v. 391), but in this passage vihāra means just ‘abode’, not ‘monastery’. In the Theragāthā (477) and the Therīgāthā (68; 115; 169 etc.) vihāra in the sense of ‘monastery’ is mentioned.

Early Buddhist recluses lived in forests, caves and practised meditation there, even in grave-yards. (They claimed themselves to be vanavāsins, those who live in forests. This picture exactly corresponds to that given by Megasthenes, the Greek traveler to India around 300 B.C.)

(6) In the earliest stage of Buddhism nuns did not exist. Legend has it that it was with Mahapājāpatī Buddha’s mother-in-law, that women took order to become nuns. However, it is likely that, when Megasthenes, the Greek ambassador sent to India by Seleucus, the king of Syria in about 300 B.C., came to the court of Candragupta, Buddhist nuns did exist, for Megasthenes relates with surprise that in India ‘lady philosophers’ existed. (It is almost certain that Jain nuns came into existence later than in Buddhism.)

(7) When earlier gāthās were composed, the fully developed form of disciplines (paṭimokkha) as can be seen in the Pali and Chinese versions of The Book of Discipline (Vinaya-piṭaka) did not exist, for it is not mentioned in entirety in gāthās, and the paṭimokkha as is mentioned in the Suttanipāta) is very simple.

To the question: “Which are the precepts and vows (sīlabbatāni) for a resolute bhikkhu?”, the Suttanipāta (v. 961) sets forth the regulations for the way of life, especially the diet and clothing of bhikkhus. In Buddhist literature in general sīlabbatāni were refuted as being set forth by other religions, but here they were set forth for Buddhist ascetics, which sounds very strange for those who have knowledge of Buddhist literature. This can be explained away only in this way Early Buddhism in the process of formation did not have special technical terms peculiar to Buddhism, therefore Buddhists used the term which was current throughout all religions, and was in common with other schools.

After describing regulations about dwelling, the Suttanipāta lays injunctions:

“Let him not commit theft,

This is substantially close to the teaching of the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (III, 17, 4)

let him not speak falsely, let him touch friendly what is feeble or strong,

what he acknowledges to be the agitation of the mind, let him drive that off as a partisan of Kaṇha (i. e. Māra). (v. 967)”

Here we can find three among the five precepts of Buddhism, mentioned in the Chāndogya-Upaniṣad and the Suttanipāta. It means Buddhism inherited these precepts from early religions, and later systematized them in a fixed form.

“Let him not fall into the power of anger and arrogance: having dug up the root of these, let him live, and let him overcome both what is pleasant and what is unpleasant.”

Jainism also teaches the same thing. “(A monk) should forsake arrogance and anger” (thambhaṃ ca kohaṃ ca cae, Dasavesāliya. IX, 3, 12)

(8) Gotama the Buddha was looked upon as an excellent personage, and was not deified, but deification of Gotama the Buddha was going to take shape gradually. This process will be discussed in a later section of this book.

Buddhism is the teaching to have one become a Buddha, and also the teaching which was set forth by Buddha. But ‘the teaching which was set forth by Buddha’ does not necessarily mean ‘the teaching which was set forth by Śākyamuni’. Besides Śākyamuni there were many other Buddhas.

In Jain scriptures those who have perfected their religious practice are all called ‘buddha’. A person who has attained enlightenment is called ‘buddha’ in Jain scriptures also. Buddhism just inherited it. According to the “Words of Sages” (Isibhāsiyāim), a Jain scripture, non-Jain sages were also called ‘buddha’, such as Uddālaka and Yājñavalkya, the Upaniṣadic philosophers, and some sages who appear in great epics. Before deification of Śākyamuni began, all excellent ascetics of Buddhism were called ‘buddhas’. For example, the term ‘buddha’ in the Suttanipāta (513; 517; 523; 622; 643; 646 etc.) means simply ‘an excellent ascetic’, not the glorified and deified Buddha.

The term ‘buddha’ did not mean a single person. Theoretically we are led to the conclusion that the teachings which enable us to become buddhas could exist besides the teaching by Śākyamuni. It was only that they were not conveyed to posterity under the name of Buddhism (Buddhasāsana, Bauddha).

Devadatta is hated nearly in all Buddhist scriptures, although the teachings ascribed to him are contradictory to each other. This much was common to all versions of his legend: He was a dissenter, although he wanted to become a Buddha and to have others become Buddhas. He was also a Buddhist and established a Buddhist order, which continued to exist till later periods, and which differed with the Buddhist order of Śākyamuni. Fa-hien (4th century A.D.), the Buddhist pilgrim, when he traveled to Śrāvastī, found the Buddhist order residing there and worshipping the three Buddhas in the past, but not worshipping Śākyamuni.<sup>5</sup> Hsuan-tsang relates that the monks of the Buddhist order of Devadatta, living in three monasteries, didn’t take milk and butter.<sup>6</sup>

It is said that “they follow the posthumous teachings of Devadatta”.

Part II Early Buddhism

5. The Thought of Early Buddhism*

In the days of the rise of Buddhism there appeared many heretical teachers,<sup>1</sup> who expressed their respective opinions freely and arbitrarily, although traditional Brahmanism still preserved its sway.

Some Pali Buddhist terms appear in their Ar-dhamāgadhī forms with similar meanings as Jaina (and Ājīvaka?) terms, but we have to admit that what appear to have been the special features of Buddhism, taken together, differentiate it from other religions which flourished at the time of its origin.<sup>5</sup> It absorbed various forms of popular beliefs.<sup>6</sup> However, questions about metaphysical problems were forbidden.<sup>7</sup>

There is no reason to believe that the Buddha had any desire to compete polemically with other sects.<sup>8</sup> There is an opinion that there is a concept of meaningless statement in the Pali Nikāyas.<sup>9</sup>

The first problem which Early Buddhism took up with was one of suffering.<sup>10</sup> Suffering (duḥkha) means that things do not work as one wants them to.<sup>11</sup>

Early Buddhists took up the empirical facts which directly confront men. Everything changes (anicca).<sup>12</sup> Nothing is permanent. It is wrong to assume any metaphysical substance that exists, transcending changes in the phenomenal world.<sup>13</sup> Based upon this standpoint another very important teaching of Early Buddhism comes out, that is the one of Non-self.<sup>14</sup> The ultimate purport of the teaching of Non-self was to get rid of selfish desires.<sup>15</sup> It was nothing but enlightenment.<sup>16</sup> Early Buddhists, believed that by the attitude of not assuming anything except one's Self as Self, one could get over sufferings.<sup>17</sup> Paradoxically speaking, Buddhism aimed at establishing the existential subjectivity or individuality by the negation of the ego.<sup>18</sup> The realization of the true Self was striven for.<sup>19</sup> Buddhism did not deny the self as such, contrary to the general assumption by many scholars who tend to regard the theory of Non-Self as a sort of nihilism.<sup>19'</sup>

In a stage of early Buddhism 'anicca', 'dukkha', 'anattā' came to be often mentioned as a set of principal ideas.<sup>19''</sup>

Ātman is often referred to with the image of light (jyotis) inheriting the teachings of earlier Upaniṣads.<sup>20</sup> Ātman is compared to light.<sup>21</sup> The practice of Buddhism can be interpreted as the formation of the true self.<sup>22</sup> But all things are temporary existences which are changing always.<sup>23</sup>

Buddhists adopted the notion of transmigration which was prevalent among common people in those days,<sup>24</sup> taking it for granted, without examining it philosophically. Then, what is the relation of the teaching of Non-self with the notion of transmigration?<sup>25</sup> In later days the teaching of Non-self came to be interpreted as the non-existence of the soul. The relationship between the theory of No-soul and the notion of karma was greatly discussed—how is it possible for the theory of No-soul to be a basis for ethical practices?<sup>26</sup> In order to establish the notion of karma,<sup>27</sup> the existence of the subject of transmigration was presupposed, even in the scriptures of Early Buddhism,<sup>28</sup> and especially in the Paṭyāsi-sutta.<sup>29</sup>

The problem of death was seriously discussed.<sup>30</sup> But the fundamental standpoint by origin seems to have been that of not being affected by either the notion of Self or that of Non-Self.<sup>31</sup>

The central conception of Buddhism must be that of dharma.<sup>32</sup> Buddha is the one who sees dharma.<sup>33</sup> 'Dharma' denotes a norm and also whatever is regulated by the norm.<sup>34</sup>

In Buddhism the concept of dhamma was put forth to substitute the concept of Brahman in the Upaniṣads.<sup>35</sup>

Various systems of dharmas were set forth in Early Buddhism.<sup>36</sup> Even defilements

Probably the first systematized teaching was one of the Four Noble Truths,<sup>45</sup> and its practical implication was that of the Middle Way.<sup>46</sup> The Four Noble Truths are: (1) the Noble Truth of Suffering; (2) the Noble Truth of the Origin of Suffering; (3) the Noble Truth of the cessation of Suffering (i.e. nirvāna); and (4) the Noble Truth of the Path leading to the Cessation of Suffering. This Path is called the Noble Eightfold Path or the Middle Way. The way of investigating as is found in the case of the Four Noble Truths can be found

- (1) Ignorance (avijjā)
- (2) Volitional Activities (sankhārā, pl.)
- (3) Discriminative Consciousness (viññāṇa)
- (4) Mind and Matter<sup>54</sup> (nāmarūpa)

asserted by some scholars that the interdependence between viññāṇa and nāma-rūpa is the basic nexus from which all subject-object relationships in ordinary experiences come out, and its dynamic structure reveals also the inner working of our mind, through which our conversion from ignorance (avijjā) to enlightenment becomes possible.<sup>59</sup>

Although there must have been existed a complicated process in formulating the Twelve Link formula, it is undeniable that it is analogous in its way of formulation to the formulas set forth by other philosophical systems of India, such as Sāṃkhya-Yoga.<sup>59'</sup>

The original prototype of the theory is found in the older portions of the Suttanipāta; and some similar sayings can be found in Jain Works.<sup>60</sup> The explanations of the theory in the scriptures have two aspects: i.e., one is relevant to living being; the other to all phenomena which appear.<sup>61</sup> The central purport of the theory is idampaccayatā.<sup>62</sup> Each link should be carefully investigated.<sup>63</sup> Sickness is inherent in human existence.<sup>64</sup>

Existence (bhava)<sup>65</sup> is constituted by the Five Skandhas.<sup>66</sup> Anyhow, Dependent Origination is strongly based on the law of karma.<sup>67</sup> It means the origination of anything by itself, by something else, or by both or by non-cause.<sup>68</sup> The purpose of teaching the theory is to explain in terms of facts, how we become elevated or degenerated,<sup>69</sup> and its purport is not essentially different from that of The Four Noble Truths.<sup>70</sup> of what the ultimate reality is. They admitted that things are 'provisional'.<sup>83</sup>

Buddhism did not proclaim a unified or consecutive doctrine. The teaching could differ with the mental ability of the persons addressed.

The method of teaching in early Buddhism was in accordance to the intellectual capacity of followers.<sup>84</sup> When laymen were to be inculcated, stress was laid on other aspects different from those as mentioned above.

Parables and similes were often resorted to to educate believers.<sup>85</sup> In Buddhist literature (Jātakas, Avadānas etc.) there are some Non-human Being (Amanussa) tales in which travelers meet non-human figures on their trips.<sup>86</sup> To be born into heaven was hankered for by people. They could do so by means of mystical power or receiving them by grace on the part of Buddha and sages. In this way there were set forth tales on visits to heavens or hells in Pali literature.<sup>87</sup>

At the outset Buddhism did not aim at acquiring the knowledge of the natural world; Buddhist cosmology came to be systematized gradually.<sup>88</sup>

According to Buddhist cosmology there are the four states of Ārūpya-dhātu (the non-material world), i.e. Limitless space, limitless Consciousness, Non-existence and Neither thought nor non-thought. But these four states were not set forth from the outset of Buddhism. These states came to be conceived one by one with the lapse of time in the process of development of Buddhism, and finally they were put together as constituting the Arūpa-

Buddhists held the ideas of the Three Evil Realisms, i.e. hells<sup>88''</sup> (naraka, or rather infernos in some respects), hungry ghosts<sup>88'''</sup> (preta), and beasts (tiryagyonī). But there was no idea of eternal damnation.

In the days of early Buddhism the Mahāyāna did not exist, but Mahāyānistic ideas, such as suñña, viññāna and cittamātra are set forth in Pali scriptures also in their incipient-stage.

Various ideas were assimilated into systems of Buddhist thought,<sup>89</sup> and this explains the reason why Buddhism has spread in many countries without much opposition by systems of indigenous thoughts in their respective country.

It is an urgent business to translate Buddhist texts into Western languages. But in some cases equivalents adopted in Western translations are misleading or desperately unintelligible according to some reviewers.<sup>89'</sup>

6. The Practice of Early Buddhism<sup>1</sup>

The practice of Buddhism was set forth in the spirit of the Middle Way, defying both extremes of indulgence in gross, carnal desires and self-affliction by mortification, although at the outset the traditional religious self-mortification (tapas) was encouraged at least verbally<sup>2</sup> and its meaning was changed substantially, with the result that finally, the verbal extollment of self-mortification was forsaken. The right practice consists in what is called the Eightfold Path.<sup>3</sup>

The Order of Buddhism is called 'Saṅgha'<sup>4</sup>: this word originally meant 'group', implying 'republic' in the political sense and 'guild' in the economical sense of the word.<sup>5</sup> Owing to various personal reasons disciples of the Buddha took order.<sup>6</sup>

In the earliest phase of the spread of Buddhism the order was not closely organized, so that the leader of Buddhism was not always regarded as Gotama Buddha, but occasionally Sāriputta, in the eyes of Jains. It is likely that Sāriputta tried to make Buddhist austerities more lenient and less strict and to emphasize the virtue of compassion, according to a Jain tradition.<sup>7</sup>

The Order of Early Buddhism first spread only in the plain along the Ganges.<sup>8</sup> The development of the Order in Early Buddhism can be divided into three stages.<sup>9</sup> The Saṅghārāma, which consisted of stūpas and dwellings, came into existence already in the 2nd century B.C.<sup>10</sup>

With the lapse of time the fear appeared that the Order might decline and that the teaching of Buddha might be brought to naught (法滅).<sup>11</sup>

Buddhist ethics<sup>12</sup> should not be discussed as a whole or as a unit. It should be divided into two sections;<sup>13</sup> i.e., the ethics for the homeless<sup>14</sup> (monks and nuns), and that for laymen.<sup>15</sup> King Milinda asserted that following the life of a householder is essential to mankind, whereas Nāgasena the monk asserted the superiority of the life of a homeless ascetic.<sup>16</sup> Anyhow, the ritual of taking vows, clerical and lay, developed with the lapse of time.<sup>16'</sup>

The Pali word: gotrabhū means 'to become an ariya as a houseless monk'.<sup>16''</sup>

The 'good' (kusala) in the worldly sense should be based upon the 'good' in the super-worldly, religious sense.<sup>17</sup> In later days the Buddhist Vinaya came to be influential on secular law.<sup>18</sup>

The "evil" was regarded as the reverse of the "good". However, it has some more positive meanings.<sup>18'</sup>

The management of the Order was carried on according to specific rules.<sup>19</sup> Rules of the early Buddhist Order were established by modifying the laws which were concurrent in India in those days.<sup>20</sup> The contents of the Book of Disciplines, which is entitled the Vinaya, were modified and changed so that it would be substantially adapted to the changing circumstances of time and place.<sup>21</sup> With regard to the Rules of Conduct for Monks,<sup>22</sup> (bhikkhu-pāṭimokkha), the first 152 articles prior to the adhikaraṇas are common to all the Vinaya texts. This means that these articles had been fixed before Buddhism was split into Theravāda and Mahāsāṅghika, and they were enlarged after the split. The practice of discipline in the Buddhist Order is to be regarded as a sort of education.<sup>23</sup> Novices were ordained according to fixed rules.<sup>24</sup> They had to observe the custom of tonsure.<sup>24'</sup>

In order to become a fully qualified monk or nun, the ceremony of higher ordination, i.e., admission to the privileges of recognized monk or nun was required; this custom has been in practice till the present day in South Asian countries.<sup>25</sup>

The bhikṣuṇī-prātimokṣa (Rules of Conduct for Nuns),<sup>26</sup> differs greatly with sects. The divergence here is more conspicuous. This fact shows that the bhikṣuṇī-prātimokṣa was not firmly fixed before the split, or that the tradition of it was not firmly established.<sup>27</sup> There is no mention of the nuns. But the problem of women was paid special attention by early

Buddhists.<sup>27'</sup>

It is generally admitted that Buddhism advocated equality of man and woman as a principle.

The most grave sins were the pārājikas.<sup>28</sup> Pācittiya, another kind of offense, has other synonymous appellations.<sup>29</sup> Monks were requested to be decent. They should put on robes properly. Table manners were strictly and minutely instructed.<sup>30</sup> Monks should not be involved in commercial dealings.<sup>31</sup>

In the order high priests were addressed with the title: 'bhadanta'.<sup>32</sup>

It is not likely that Buddhist doctrine is independent of Buddhist practice. Therefore, by seeing the changes of the abodes (senāsana) of monks from the earliest days, we shall be able to understand fully how Early Buddhism developed in accordance with the changes of the natural features and other environments. In early times, Buddhist monks dwelled alone in remote abodes and engaged themselves in the simplest religious life, avoiding worldly matters as much as possible. There were many solitary ascetics in Buddhism. They were called paccekabuddhas<sup>32'</sup> as in Jainism. Their abodes were: (1) forests and caves (arañña, vana, kānana, rukhamūla, pabbata, giri, guhā, lena, kandara, sela, etc.), (2) deserted places (abbhokāsa, cetiya, sosānika, palālapuñja, bila, tīra, etc.), (3) hermitages (assama, kuṭi, koṭṭhada, etc.). As the Saṅgha grew bigger, ārāmas and vihāras were enlarged. The characteristics of monks' life in early times were: dwelling alone (ekavihāra); seclusion (paṭisallāna); and practice of meditation (jhāna). The strict vows (dhutaṅgas) were also their proper rules of life. With the lapse of time many monks started to live together. The original characteristics mentioned above were gradually modified, but the original aims of monks' life remained unchanged.

Monks wore Three Robes (ti-civara) of yellowish red color (kaśāya) and their robes were called kāśāya,<sup>33</sup> this color being quite in common with those of ascetics in those days.

Continuous efforts for maintaining the original life of monks were made (e.g., the enactment of Vinaya, the practice of asubhānuṣṣanā, etc.). Monks should strictly practise celibacy.<sup>33'</sup> Monks should not get into drowsy slothness.<sup>34</sup> This fact is evident in the seven suttas in Aśoka's inscription and in the earliest conditions of the Saṅgha in Ceylon established by Mahinda Thera.<sup>35</sup>

Monasteries gradually were built.<sup>36</sup> The spirit of the Saṅgha was to realize living together by its members.<sup>37</sup> The properties of the Saṅgha were owned by the community (共有制) or by the caitya with which it was affiliated (塔物制).<sup>38</sup> Infringements on the regulations were punished by the Saṅgha.<sup>39</sup> Various legal procedures were to keep harmonious relations in the order;<sup>40</sup> when necessary, a court was established and suits were brought to the court.<sup>41</sup> The regulations to stop quarrels (滅諍法) were proclaimed.<sup>42</sup>

They practised the Buddhist Lent (uposatha) on the New and Full Moon days, which custom originally occurred among cattleraising people and later was observed by the Jains and others as well.<sup>43</sup>

Monks were encouraged to practise discipline without being idle and negligent.<sup>44</sup> However, sick people were carefully attended to.<sup>45</sup>

Monks practised meditation.<sup>46</sup> The practice of yoga<sup>46'</sup> was called with other names in Early Buddhism. It was only in later Abhidharma and the Yogācāra school that the term yoga came to be in frequent use.<sup>47</sup> Various kinds of jhānas<sup>48</sup> or samādhis<sup>49</sup> are mentioned in the scriptures. It is likely that the scheme of the Four Arūpa Dhātu Meditations was formed in later days.<sup>49'</sup>

At ceremonies<sup>49'</sup> monks recited phrases, but these were supposed to be meditations and not prayers.<sup>50</sup> By means of meditation they aimed at attaining nirvāṇa.<sup>51</sup> Samatha is the state in which mental functions have stopped and the mind is not perturbed; vipassanā is the state in which intelligence understands things as they are.<sup>52</sup> Anupassanā is intuition of truth which takes place gradually according to the order of objects of contemplation.<sup>53</sup> Anupassanā virtually means the same as vipassanā, and the power of vipassanā (vipassanābala) helps one get to the attainment of the truth. It is taught in the Suttanipāta, and an elaborate system of it was set forth in the Visuddhimagga.<sup>54</sup> In Theravāda Buddhism a kind of meditation (asubhānupassanā) is taught in which one should comprehend a corpse as impure and foul, in order to help one rid himself of his attachments, one should meditate upon one's own body as a corpse. Southern Buddhists believed that the arising of desires should be suppressed by a comprehension of the impurity of the body.<sup>55</sup> However, the concept of feminine beauty and natural beauty gradually crept into the early Buddhist literature.<sup>55'</sup> The six Contemplations (cha anussati<sup>56</sup>) were also taught. Sati-paṭṭhānas were taught from early days.<sup>56'</sup>

Various groupings of virtues were made, such as the seven<sup>57</sup> or thirty-seven bodhyaṅgas.<sup>58</sup> To the monks advanced in practice mystical powers (pratihāriyas) were ascribed.<sup>59</sup> But magic was forbidden strictly.<sup>60</sup>

Four steps to the Arhatship were supposed and finally the scheme of the Four sāmañña-phala came to be fixed.<sup>61</sup>

Early Buddhism has a system of ethics of its own.<sup>62</sup> The fundamental principle of Buddhist ethics may be set forth as love or benevolence. The love in the pure form was called 'True Friendliness' (mettā) or 'Compassion' (mercy, karuṇā). It can embrace all living beings.<sup>63</sup> Being based upon the ideal of compassion Buddhism denounced the traditional religious practice of offering sacrifices to gods by Brahmins.<sup>64</sup>

The Buddhist mercy and Christian love may be said to flow together in a common principle of universal love, which shows how close the two religions are together. There is, however, this difference. One is a parable of God's love, immediately welcoming the erring son on his return. The other is a parable of the Buddha's mercy, carefully leading the wandering youth by ways suited to develop in him a better human nature.<sup>65</sup> The concept of the set of the Four Pamānas, i.e., benevolence, compassion, joy and calmness of mind, came to be formed with the lapse of time.<sup>66</sup> Other sets of virtues were also composed.<sup>67</sup>

It was admitted by Indians in general that concerning the distinction between good and bad Buddhism abided by the opinion (motivism) that the values of moral conducts can be determined by their motives.<sup>68</sup>

Lay ethics<sup>68'</sup> played an important role in early Buddhism. The ethical thought of the scriptures,<sup>69</sup> especially of the Jātakas<sup>70</sup>, is noteworthy. Good acts were encouraged; bad acts were discouraged.<sup>71</sup> They were discussed in minute detail among Hinayāna dogmatists.<sup>72</sup> Śīla<sup>73</sup> means 'giving up evil voluntarily,' and vinaya involves punishments.<sup>74</sup> An upāsaka (lay devotee) is the one who has taken up the vow of the Three Refuges and the Five Precepts.<sup>75</sup>

In the case of the Three Refuges dharma was occasionally interpreted as 'the teachings', and occasionally as 'virāga'.<sup>75</sup> It was in a somewhat developed stage that the Five Precepts were formulized. At first only four precepts were enjoined, with the fifth (abstention from liquor) being added later.<sup>76</sup> The Ten Precepts were also enjoined.<sup>77</sup>

Early Buddhism taught various precepts based upon different human relationships, e.g. between parents and children, man and wife,<sup>77'</sup> teacher and pupil, employer and employee, friend and comrade, religious preceptor and devotee, etc. These were finally systematized in The Teaching for Sigāla (Sigālovada), which has been regarded as the Vinaya for laity.<sup>77''</sup>

At the Uposatha<sup>78</sup> laymen were required to observe the Eight Vows.<sup>79</sup> There were some teachings specially meant for lay women (upāsikās).<sup>80</sup> Laymen revered and supported homeless monks.<sup>81</sup>

Some upāsakas at Kosambī refused to revere the Saṅgha.<sup>82</sup> Laymen ethics was enjoined in full detail.<sup>83</sup> Whether laymen (householders) can become arhats or not was an issue of controversy among various sects. The Uttarāpathakas asserted the possibility<sup>84</sup> of becoming an arhat for a man who stays in the condition of a householder. In the scriptures there are some passages in which it was implicitly supposed that even laymen could attain nirvāṇa.<sup>85</sup>

The Ten Good Vows were enjoined to both clergy and laymen.<sup>86</sup> These vows find their counterparts in Brahmanistic works also.<sup>87</sup>

hibited. Onions, etc. were also prohibited, because they stink and cause others to feel disgusted.<sup>88</sup> In order to show respect, both clergy and laity practised the rite of pradakṣiṇā.<sup>89</sup>

The basis of Buddhist activities was very often alleged to be 'gratitude' (kataññatā).<sup>90</sup> This virtue (恩 or 知恩) was especially emphasized in the Far East.<sup>90'</sup> The fundamental scheme of the teaching for the laity was taught to be that of giving alms, observing precepts and expecting to be born in the heaven (or a heaven.)<sup>91</sup> Discourses of heavens (saggakathā) were quite common.<sup>92</sup>

Donation of things or properties was practiced not only by laymen but also by monks and nuns already in Early Buddhism. It was especially emphasized in the Mahāsaṃghika-vinaya.<sup>93</sup>

The problem of distribution of income and properties in the Saṅgha is discussed.<sup>94</sup> There is a legend that Mahāpajāpatī, Buddha's step-mother, wanted to make a donation of a special kind of robe to Buddha, but that he declined to accept it as meant solely for him, and made it as a donation to the Saṅgha, the brotherhood. In this legend the problem of distribution of goods is implied.<sup>95</sup>

Buddhānussati (Buddhānussati) was primarily samādhi.<sup>95'</sup>

In early Buddhism it was supposed that diseases could be cured by medicines, and exceptionally magical formulas were resorted to together with medicines; in many cases it was believed that diseases were often cured by spiritual effectiveness of Buddha's mercy or Buddhānussati and so on.<sup>96</sup>

Resorting to the expectation of birth in heaven, the Jātakas exhort altruistic philanthropy.<sup>97</sup> The altruistic ideal was extolled by the early Buddhists, and the objects of service, e.g. the Saṅgha or any holy persons, or good actions as such were called 'fields of merit' (puñṇakkhetta) which will yield good fruits to the benefactor,<sup>98</sup> whereas, wicked men were

7. The Worship of Buddhas and Faith

'Buddha' means an 'Enlightened One',<sup>1</sup> which term was used by many religions of the day.<sup>2</sup>

It is likely that the word 'Buddha' was pronounced as 'but' in Central Asian languages, and that it was transcribed with the Chinese character '佛'.<sup>3</sup>

佛 means 'man', and 弗 means 'negation.' He is a man and a 'non-man' (superman) at the same time, as in the case of 弗 ('boiling') with the implication that vapor is water and non-water at the same time. Originally the word 'tathāgata', his epithet, meant 'one who has attained truth' (the Perfect One),<sup>4</sup> or "the One Going Far or Beyond".<sup>5</sup>

Occasionally he was called 'the one who saves' (tāyin), although this traditional interpretation seems to be wrong etymologically.<sup>6</sup>

In the older portions of the scriptures Gotama Siddhārtha was regarded only as a man, not as a super-human being.<sup>7</sup> However, with the lapse of time Gotama the man gradually came to be deified.<sup>8</sup> The concept of Buddha underwent a great change in the process of its development.<sup>9</sup> He received such an appellation as "vijjācaraṇasampanna".<sup>10</sup> He was supposed to work wonders.<sup>11</sup> Finally he came to be called with the Ten Epithets (十號).<sup>11'</sup>

The first step of adoration of Buddha is shown in the formula of "Adoration to Buddha" (namo . . . sambuddhassa).<sup>12</sup> Buddha became an object of adoration and also of meditation. The term "buddhānusr̥ti" in early Buddhist scriptures had four meanings: (1) meditation on the virtues of Buddha; (2) hearing the name of Buddha; (3) repetition of the name of Buddha; and (4) meditation on the figure of Buddha.<sup>13</sup> This practice became very important in later Buddhism. The Pali word paṭissā means 'veneration', an expression of religiosity.<sup>13'</sup>

The figure of Buddha came to be glorified.<sup>14</sup> Many marks of a Buddha came to be classified.<sup>15</sup> He was regarded as being endowed with 32 features of the body.<sup>16</sup> He was worshipped along with "dharma" and "saṅgha" as the "Three Treasures".<sup>17</sup>

According to the teaching of Buddhism, Buddha is not limited to one person alone.<sup>18</sup> Everybody who has ever attained the Enlightenment can be called 'Buddha'. Inheriting the idea of the Seven Sages in Brahmanical literature beginning with the R̥g-veda, early Buddhists coined the idea of the Seven Buddhas in the past.<sup>19</sup> Later the belief in the 24 Buddhas in the past came into existence<sup>19'</sup>. The most celebrated one was Dipaṅkara.<sup>19''</sup> At first it was believed that in one world there was only one Buddha in one period.<sup>20</sup> Later many

Buddhas, who were supposed to exist in one and the same period, came to be worshipped.<sup>21</sup>

Deep significance was attached to faith.<sup>22</sup> Faith in Buddhism is expressed with the terms śraddhā,<sup>23</sup> prasāda and bhakti.<sup>24</sup> Of these, prasāda is peculiarly Buddhistic. Faith appears in the form of purified mind (pasanna-citta); the unity of faith and wisdom is characteristic of Buddhist belief.<sup>25</sup> Bhakti, which conveys the meaning of 'devotional faith' came to be used more frequently with the lapse of time.<sup>26</sup>

In the time when Buddhism appeared various forms of popular faith were current,<sup>27</sup> and some of them were incorporated into Buddhist popular faith.

The Buddha was worshipped in symbolic ways, e.g. in the forms of the pair of footprints, the throne, the flaming pillar, the Dharmacakra, the Triratna symbol, the Bodhi tree, the stūpa, etc.<sup>28</sup> The origin of stūpa can be traced in megalithic cultures, the remainings of which can be found chiefly in south India.<sup>29</sup> The caityas<sup>30</sup> were pre-Buddhistic institutions and the Buddhists as well as Jains gave the same name to their sanctuaries.<sup>31</sup> With the development of Caitya worship the practice of pilgrimage took place, and the pilgrimage, at first to the four holy places, and finally to the eight Holy places, was encouraged. A scripture specially for that purpose, i.e. the Aṣṭamahāsthānacaityastotra, was composed, and the 八大靈塔名號經 is the Chinese version of a text similar to it.<sup>31'</sup> The practice of worshipping

8. Social Thought

Social thought can be traced in Early Buddhism.<sup>1</sup> The equality of men was advocated.<sup>2</sup> The caste system was disapproved.<sup>3</sup> The position of women was admitted as equal to that of men; and an ethics specially meant for women was taught.<sup>4</sup>

The monks and nuns of Early Buddhism refrained from engaging in economical activities.<sup>5</sup> They were forbidden any kind of economic activity. The essential rule was to live day by day. Property was forbidden. Even clothes, food and medicines could not be held in quantities more than what could meet with immediate need. Also, work of any kind which did not coincide with the conditions of being a monk was forbidden. The transgressing of these rules gave way to the sins of Nissaggiya and Pācittiya.

However, for the faithful laymen who remained in the world no restrictions on economic activity existed. Buddhism did not despise the rich. On the contrary, wealth was esteemed to the point of considering its waste deplorable. Accumulation of wealth is a laudable activity, because sloth and waste are sins. To lay believers, the spirit of hard work in the manner of asceticism was encouraged. But riches should not remain immobilized, nor should they be dissipated on pleasures. Having accumulated money, one should use it to help others. Wealth makes sense when it is used for religious ends, that is, to serve the needs of one's neighbors, and above all those of the monks, after having served one's own needs.<sup>6</sup> Goods and production should be esteemed.

All vocations were acknowledged except trade in weapons, living beings, meat, liquors and poisons. The vocations which cause killing were forbidden. Thus Buddhism introduced limitations on the practice of vocations, but they did not have a magical nature like those of Hinduism, nor were they as numerous as in Jainism. They arise from the incompatibility of some vocations with the principles of religion.

There is so much similarity with the spirit of Western capitalism in the rise.<sup>7</sup> However, Early Buddhism, while not placing limitations on property, hindered the formation of capitalism because according to its teaching wealth should be turned to religious ends. Moreover, the continual exaltation of the life of monks and the insistence on the brevity of earthly life, finally made economic goods appear of slight value in the eyes of the faithful. However, the most important factor must be that Indians lacked the capability of applying scientific methods based upon mathematical calculation to the objective, natural world, which was conspicuous by eventuating in the formation of capitalism in the West.

As for political ideas,<sup>8</sup> early Buddhism did not claim divine right for kings, but insisted that he was to be chosen by men. It thus admitted that existence of a 'social contract' as in the West, through which men designated one of themselves as head of the society in order to obtain social tranquility and welfare. This duty was then transmitted from father to son. This is the origin of dynasties of kings. People pay homage to the king by paying him tribute; and the king, on his part, has the obligation to protect the people to the point of reimbursing one who has been robbed, when he can not make the thief do so. In the Mahābhārata there is inserted a legend similar to that of the Buddhist social contract, except that men agree to ask God for a king, who therefore is such by divine right.<sup>9</sup> Thus the origin of the state was explained by Early Buddhists just in the same way as in the Western theory of 'social contract'.

Early Buddhism assumed a pessimistic and negative attitude towards the state. In those days, in fact, the kings did nothing but engage in wars among themselves, rendering the condition of the people miserable. For the Buddhists this meant a lack of clemency, by which they made the kings responsible for the crimes committed by their subjects. If a man steals, it is not his fault, but that of the king, who keeps his subjects in such miserable conditions which force them to steal. In Buddhism there was a recognition of social crimes for which the rulers were held responsible. The polemic against the state of its time was so violent in early Buddhism, even going so far as to consider it a diabolical creation (just as early Christianity did, for more or less the same reasons). "The kṣatriyas are serpents", said the Buddha. He aimed at realizing his ideal perfectly in the monastic society, which withdrew completely from state authority. It was considered a sin for a monk to approach a king.

The Buddhist order occupied itself exclusively with the monastic community, in which one might establish the perfect society. The essential character of this society was lack of punishment by force. The guilty one had to apply to himself the penalties that had been decreed against him.

As for relations with the state, two fundamental principles were proclaimed: the absolute independence of the religious community; and its superiority, as an eternal society, over the state, which is transitory. This comes from the fact that Buddhism arose in the period when citizen states flourished, and the concepts of state and nation were utterly unknown. The saṃgha was placed in many cases beyond the reach of state power.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>9</sup> In this connection it may be interesting to note that the ancient Japanese did not admit the Buddhist theory of social contract, considering it proper for India, but improper for Japan, and stressed for their own country the continuity of the dynasty descending from a divine ancestor.

Thus Buddhism at first taught their followers to keep aloof from states and kings, but later it came to advocate the ideal of governing people with universal laws (dharma),<sup>11</sup> motivated by compassion. The highest principle of Buddhism is that of the conservation of peace and the abolition of fighting. A pacifistic attitude was advocated by early Buddhists.<sup>12</sup> Wars were abhorred, peace was striven for.<sup>13</sup> The ideal of the universal monarch Cakravartin was advocated.<sup>14</sup> The Buddhist ideal therefore ended by postulating a universal state, strong enough to maintain peace internally and externally; and this ideal found its advocator in King Aśoka. It was King Aśoka who realized the political ideal of Buddhism in the form of the first unified and centralized state of India. None of the titles he assumed on himself indicates that he aimed at absolutism. He was proud of carrying on his political rule by basing his beliefs upon the concept of dharma; he exhorted activity in society, and taught consciousness of one's obligation to others. The mythology of Cakravartin seems to reflect on the figure of the sovereigns of the Maurya dynasty. Aśoka launched social works for humanitarian ideals. Although he was a devout Buddhist and helped to propagate the teachings of Buddha, he was tolerant to all religions. This attitude can be found in King Jalaukas also. The ethical principles enjoined by him were similar to those taught throughout all religions.<sup>15</sup>

There was inherent in the Theravāda political system an anarchical tradition which prevented development of bureaucracy, the most stabilizing element in any state. With regard to Burma, it was precisely that element, bureaucracy and a common law, which monarchical Burma lacked.<sup>16</sup>

In Buddhist texts we come across two appellations: vara-cakravartin (a noble universal ruler) and bala-cakravartin (a strong universal ruler), both of which are not substantially different from each other. (Shōkō Watanabe in Tōyō Univ. Asian Studies, No. 2, 1964, pp. 83-88. (in Engl.)

<sup>15</sup> These features were already pointed out by other previous scholars. But Hajime Nakamura discussed them in detail, based upon inscriptions in comparison with Sanskrit, Pali and Chinese texts. (Nakamura: op. cit., pp. 149-285.)

CHAPTER III

CONSERVATIVE BUDDHISM AND TRANSITION TO MAHĀYĀNA

9. Historical Background

9.A. The Mauryan Dynasty

After the invasion and retreat by Alexander the great, all India came to be unified for the first time in its history under King Candragupta (B.C. 317–293), who founded the Mauryan dynasty (B.C. 317–180).<sup>1</sup> It is said that he owed much of his success to Kauṭilya, his chief minister, to whom the authorship of the Kauṭilya Arthaśāstra has been ascribed.<sup>2</sup> Megasthenes, the ambassador from Syria at that time, was sent to the court of Candragupta and left his travel records in Greek; these are very valuable for historical studies. Formerly, the descriptions by Megasthenes<sup>3</sup> and other Greeks were thought by many Indologists to be

Allan Dahlquist: Megasthenes and Indian Religion. A Study in Motives and Types. Stockholm, Göteborg and Uppsala, Almqvist and Wiskell, 1962. 320 pp. In this work he asserted that Hinduism had not yet arisen, and that Krishna had not yet attained his later position, that Heracles in Megasthenes was in fact Indra, whereas Dionysos was the god of the Mundas. "The Greeks chose Greek names for the gods they wished to describe purely on account of the unquestionable resemblances between Heracles and Indra on the one hand, and Dionysos and sun-god/culture-hero of the Mundas on the other." (pp. 284–285) utterly absurd and not to correspond with the real situation of those days. However, it has been made clear that they correspond with descriptions in Buddhist and Jain literature.<sup>4</sup>

The power and influence of the Dynasty reached its apex with King Aśoka (reigned in c. 268–232 B.C.).<sup>5</sup>

1958, 273–276. The reliability of Megasthenes' information was doubted by R. C. Majumdar (JAOS. vol. 78, 1958, 273–276.) A controversy occurred between him and K. D. Dates in Indian history of the pre-Christian era are usually based on the dates assigned to the Mauryan Dynasty, the first empire in India which comprised all the districts of India and some adjacent countries. Although the various aspects of this empire have been elaborately discussed by Japanese scholars,<sup>6</sup> the dates of the dynasty remain uncertain. Nakamura has tried to fix them through the use of materials not fully employed hitherto.<sup>7</sup> His researches can be summarized under three headings:

1. It can be proved by the use of Greek sources that the date of King Aśoka's ascent to the throne was not later than 267 B.C. Five Greek kings are mentioned in a proclamation known to have been issued in the thirteenth year of Aśoka's reign. The conclusion that Aśoka could not have become king after 267 B.C., is based upon the knowledge that the period when all five of these Greek kings were in power was 261–255 B.C.

2. In the light of this conclusion, an examination of the Indian sources that can be trusted indicates that the most likely year for the inauguration of Aśoka's reign is 268 B.C. Working back from this point, it appears that Candragupta ruled from 317 to 293 B.C.;

Bindusāra, from 293 to 268 B.C.; and Aśoka, from 268 to 232 B.C. These dates agree with the various known historical facts and traditions. If they are accepted, the downfall of the Mauryan Dynasty can be placed in 180 B.C.

3. If the northern tradition about the death of the Buddha can be accepted, as mentioned before, we have to place the death of the Buddha in 383 B.C. and the death of Mahāvīra in 372 B.C.

Aśoka succeeded in establishing a centralized state for the first time in the history of India. The Mauryan dynasty established highways and canals all over the continent. For efficient administration the institution of the High Officials was useful.<sup>8</sup>

One of the economic backgrounds that enabled Aśoka to keep his mighty kingly power was the output of gold in the southern territories occupied by him.<sup>9</sup>

One may suppose that technicians of North-West India came to South India to develop gold-fields.

Aśoka promulgated his law in famous edicts which were carved on rocks or stone pillars in various vernaculars of his realm, so that they might be handed down to posterity. The diffusion of the law was entrusted to special functionaries, who occupied themselves also with civilizing the savage aborigines. The *dharma*s or duties which were advocated by Aśoka were not distinctively Buddhist. They could have been practiced in any religion. Further studies have shown that this feature could be found even in the first stage of Buddhism.<sup>10</sup> For King Aśoka, law identifies itself with good (sādhu), evil is a lack of virtue (apuñña). But good is difficult to accomplish, while evil is easy to do. For this reason the state must assume the task of making law, or good, respected. The state must bring happiness to its subjects, and not only earthly happiness, but also that of the after life. Aśoka can be compared to Antoninus; however, while Antoninus in his pessimism persecuted Christianity, Aśoka favored Buddhism. But Aśoka, being different from early Buddhist monks, did not entertain the idea of annihilation after death or that of transmigration. He believed in the existence of a transcendental world, the world of the beyond (paraloka), which would be reached by the good.

This lack of pessimism in considering earthly life, which must not be avoided but lived, brought him to the exaltation of action. Work assumed a religious significance in that it procured the means for causing happiness to men. His thought on this point led him to oppose asceticism. The mutual aid that must be given by men to one another, occupied an important role in his thinking. This was implemented by the king through his functionaries, who had the task of making law respected and used for the people's protection.

Thus Aśoka adopted the attitude of benevolence towards his subjects, and extended official aid to Buddhism and other religions.<sup>11</sup>

Revised and included in his Shūkyō to Shakai Rinri, Tokyo, Iwanami Shoten, 149-285.

The reign of Aśoka also represents a crucial era in the history of Buddhism, which became transformed into a universal religion from a discipline originally practised by only a small group of followers. In this period, Buddhism lost its anarchical nature and constructed a political and social philosophy. The social politics of the king was inspired by the principle of public welfare; and Aśoka ordered the roads opened, the wells dug, and prepared every type of assistance for the poor. He even had animal shelters built. Many institutions of this kind were established in nearby countries. After his conversion to Buddhism,<sup>12</sup> he strove for the diffusion of this religion, sending missionaries to various countries.

The ideas of Aśoka had a certain influence even on neighboring states. In fact, he extended the field of action of the law to the relations among states, which he thought should have been regulated by it. Thanks to the work of Aśoka, Buddhism extended its influence even to Western thought. Some scholars think it possible to find traces of Buddhist influence in the Essenes and the Therapeutics, two heterodox Hebrew sects as well as on Christianity.<sup>12'</sup> Aśoka's sending Buddhist missionaries to Hellenistic countries, formed the beginning of the spread of Buddhism in the West; however, Buddhism disappeared from the West in the Middle Ages.<sup>13</sup>

Aśoka helped the Buddhist order, practically assuming its maintenance.<sup>14</sup> He also assumed the task of stopping the tendency towards schism that was appearing in Buddhism; he condemned those who disturbed the order, and prescribed the texts which were to be considered authentic. Still, he did not condemn other religions. In fact, he rendered help to Brahmanism, Jainism and the Ājīvakas, and admonished them not to conflict with each other. Considering Buddhism the true religion, he admitted freedom of life and religion.

The religious ideal of Aśoka, as shown from his inscriptions, cannot be called solely Buddhist. He adapted Buddhism to the social reality of India of his time. He favored other religions as well, thinking that through these, too, morality might be safeguarded.<sup>15</sup> Aśoka's policy of tolerance had the effect of harmonizing and blending various religions of India, so that his reign gave impetus to the growth of Hinduism.<sup>16</sup>

The social and historical background of Indian Buddhism has been intensively studied in Japan since World War II; prior to this time, such Japanese studies were uncommon. H. Nakamura advocated the study of the background of philosophies and religions. He stressed the necessity of distinguishing the really historical from the mythical and legendary. With regard to the history of India, he insisted that reconstructions should proceed from solid data; and, for this purpose, materials from the Maurya period are the most valuable. He listed and annotated all the relevant materials from the Maurya period.<sup>17</sup> These studies yielded important results. Using inscriptions and other historical records, the actual position of ascetics and other religious figures in the Maurya period were discussed.<sup>18</sup>

It has been also made clear that the growing Buddhist movement was strong enough to be advanced by merchants and craftsmen in the Maurya period, and that it took root among the common people because of the close collaboration and helpful guidance of Buddhist monks. All of these conclusions were carefully documented from inscriptions and other historical records.<sup>19</sup>

It is from the time of the Mauryan dynasty on that we have come across archaeological findings in India.<sup>20</sup> At the outset Buddhists built no stūpa (carin).<sup>21</sup> However, with the spread of Buddhist faith, they came to erect huge stūpas, complying with the spiritual demand on the part of common believers.<sup>22</sup> The most ancient extant stūpas which have little been hurt are those at Sāncī,<sup>23</sup> although Bharhut has left wonderful pieces of fine arts.<sup>23'</sup> Around them were built Shrines, which were called caitya, whose meaning seems to have been 'a building to pile up (accumulate) merits'.<sup>24</sup> In the Maurya period arts were popularized.<sup>25</sup>

9.B. The Invasions by Foreign Peoples into India

The Mauryan dynasty was not strong enough in its centralization; it was susceptible to disintegration.<sup>1</sup> The two dynasties who followed it and governed the plain along the Ganges, i.e., the Kānvas and Śuṅgas,<sup>1'</sup> were rather brahmanistic.<sup>2</sup> North Western India was invaded by Greek kings<sup>3</sup> from Bactria. In their state system, Greek institutions were adopted. These kings were equipped with Greek culture and subscribed to Greek religion, but some of them came to respect the Buddhist and Hindu faiths.<sup>4</sup> King Menander (Milinda) towers among them;<sup>5</sup> his dialogue with Nāgasena, a Buddhist monk, was recorded in the Milinda-pañhā.<sup>6</sup> There is an opinion that Sāgala in the Milinda-pañhā is not Sialkot as is often supposed, but probably Bari Doab, and the description of the city in the work was based upon Taxila.<sup>7</sup> emerging Mahāyānists of later days, probably at the beginning of the Christian era. However, the beginning of this schismatic division can be traced to a much earlier date. This schismatism appeared already in the lifetime of Gotama Buddha. It is said that Devadatta,<sup>3</sup> the heretic, made Five Propositions concerning religious practice. However, what constituted the Five Propositions differs with traditions.<sup>4</sup>

Different sects<sup>5</sup> were already in existence during the reign of King Aśoka.<sup>6</sup> The tradition that the first council was held immediately after the demise of the Buddha is not historically demonstrable,<sup>7</sup> according to the opinion of a number of scholars. Mahādeva,<sup>8</sup> believed to have been responsible for the first schismatic dissension in the Northern tradition, was, according to one opinion, a champion who protested against Conservative Buddhism.<sup>9</sup>

The Vinaya was transmitted by preceptors.<sup>9'</sup> However, in the Council at Rājagṛha there were two groups of monks: those who adhered to the clauses of Vinaya, the conservatives, and those who did not, the progressives. In legends, the former was represented in the person of Mahākāśyapa and the latter in the person of Ānanda.<sup>10</sup> The Ten Points of discipline at issue during the Convention at Vaiśālī<sup>11</sup> caused a heated controversy between liberals and conservatives in the Buddhist order, and the order was divided into the Theravādins and the Mahāsaṅghikas.<sup>12</sup>

The Buddhist order tended to develop in accordance with the local features of their respective places; and this tendency gave rise to the establishment of different sects. This fact can be confirmed by various inscriptions.<sup>13</sup> The spread and schism of Hīnayāna sects are described in the Samaya-bhedoparacanacakra<sup>14</sup> and the Kāyabhedavibhaṅga-vyākhyā of Bhavya.<sup>15</sup> About twenty sects<sup>16</sup> of Hīnayāna can be traced in these inscriptions.<sup>17</sup>

Hīnayāna as well as Mahāyāna, in those days, had to a high degree an international character. The Buddhist priests who came to China during 148–400 A.D. were from Gandhāra, India, Parthia, Samarkand and the Kuṣāṇa land.<sup>18</sup> The representation of a Chinese friar in the wall-painting in Vihāra XVII at Ajantā may prove the continuity of an earlier practice of the Chinese artists coming over to Ajantā to learn Buddhist art.<sup>19</sup>

The most conservative sect seems to be the Theravāda (“The Teaching of the Elders”) which called itself the Vibhajjavāda,<sup>20</sup> and was conveyed to Ceylon by Mahinda, a son of King Aśoka.<sup>21</sup>

The appellation, Theravāda, does not stand for their doctrine, but it is a symbol of their orthodoxy which they held up in opposition to the progressive and liberal steps of the Mahāsaṅghikas, whereas Vibhajjavāda seems to have been limited to scholarly use.<sup>21</sup> This school exists even today in Southern Asia, i.e., Ceylon, Burma, Thailand, Laos and Cambodia and partly in Vietnam.<sup>22</sup> The followers of this branch claim that they observe genuine Buddhism, distilled pure from the dissenting heterodoxies.<sup>23</sup>

On the other hand, the most important sect of the Hīnayāna in the past which spread in Northern India and Central Asia was the Sarvāstivādins.<sup>24</sup> The predecessors of this school were the followers of Kātyāyana in Western India.<sup>25</sup> The Sarvāstivādins taught not only Indians, but also Chinese, Greeks, Śakas and so on, by teaching in their respective languages. It is probable that the teachings of this sect were inherited by foreigners.<sup>26</sup>

The Theravāda first spread around Avantī, then to Ceylon; the Mahāsaṅghikas took root in South Western India; the Sāṃmitīyas<sup>27</sup> in Western India, including Saurāstra; and the Sarvāstivādins spread in North Western India.<sup>28</sup> Insofar as epigraphic records of the second century A.D. are concerned, the Mahāsaṅghika school was more wide-spread than any other school, even the Sarvāstivādins. Especially in Mathura the Mahāsaṅghika school came to be the most predominant from the latter half of the first century B.C.<sup>29</sup>

Among the Sarvāstivādins, there was a school which followed the Jñānaprasthāna-śāstra, the fundamental text of this sect, and a school which did not.<sup>30</sup> The Kāśmīrean Sarvāstivādins were orthodox, whereas the Gandhāra Sarvāstivādins and the Western Teachers did not observe the Jñānaprasthāna-śāstra.<sup>31</sup> It was already acknowledged in ancient India that in the Vaibhāṣika school (the Sarvāstivādins) there had been two branches; that is, the Kāśmīra-Vaibhāṣikas and the Western (Pāścātya) Vaibhāṣikas.<sup>32</sup> The Mūlasarvāstivādins was a branch which appeared within the school of the Sarvāstivādins, that claimed to be fundamental and orthodox against other branches.<sup>33</sup>

The Sāṃmitīyas and the Vātsīputrīyas can be traced in the Gupta inscriptions.<sup>34</sup> They must have existed still later.<sup>35</sup> The Dharmaguptakas was also an important school.<sup>36</sup> of stūpas developed outside the saṅgha, independent of the sects.<sup>37</sup> Many stūpas,<sup>38</sup> temples, monuments<sup>39</sup> and cave-temples were<sup>40</sup> established by believers, both sacerdotal and lay, who professed Hīnayāna. Popular symbols,<sup>41</sup> beliefs<sup>42</sup> and customs were also adopted by Buddhists in various periods and areas. During the Buddhist period there was a practice of strewing magical sand (parittavālukā).<sup>43</sup>

The Buddha was worshipped in symbolic ways, e.g., the pair of foot, the throne, the flaming pillar, the Dharmacakra, the Triratna symbol, the Bodhi tree, the stūpa, etc.<sup>44</sup> The origin of the figural representation of Buddha is to be investigated in the art activities in Gandhāra where the Sarvāstivādin sect was predominant.<sup>45</sup>

Some monks lived in cave temples. The period of cave temples of India can be divided into two periods, the first being from the 3rd century B.C. through the 2nd century A.D. and the second from the 6th century through the 13th century.<sup>46</sup>

10.B. The Abhidharma Literature

Abhidharma means "study on the dharma".<sup>1</sup> It is a class of literature which deals with philosophical and theological topics.<sup>2</sup> In other words, it is a highly developed form of annotated texts.<sup>3</sup> It is likely that abhidharma originated from mātrkā.<sup>4</sup> It has a long history of development.<sup>5</sup> Schisms in the Order are described in Chinese versions of the Samayabhedoparacanacakra, as is mentioned above.

In the past there were many abhidharma texts of the various sects. However, only those of the Theravāda and of the Sarvāstivādins, along with some of other sects<sup>6</sup>, remain today. The Theravāda has preserved the following seven texts:

- (1) Dhammasaṅgani<sup>7</sup>. A commentary on it is the Atthasālini.<sup>8</sup>
- (2) Vibhaṅga.<sup>9</sup> Dhammahadaya-vibhaṅga, Chapter XVIII was added later.<sup>10</sup>
- (3) Kathāvatthu.<sup>11</sup> This is a book of controversy on dogmas.

(3) The Abhidharma-dharmaskandha-pāda-śāstra.<sup>27</sup> The Sanskrit original has been lost, and only fragments of it are known.<sup>28</sup> These exist in the Chinese version by Hsüan-tsang. There is an opinion that this text, the earliest of the six pādaśāstras of the Sarvāstivādins, was composed at least 400 years after the Parinirvāṇa of the Buddha,<sup>29</sup> whereas another opinion is that this text was composed after the Abhidharma-saṅgītiparyāyapāda-śāstra and prior to other texts.<sup>30</sup> Passages of the Abhidharma-dharmaskandha-pāda-śāstra were cited about fifteen times in the Abhidharma-saṅgīti-paryāya-pāda-śāstra.<sup>31</sup> This text has a close connection with the Vibhaṅga.

after the compilation of the Mahāvibhāṣā-śāstra.<sup>41</sup>

The biggest thesaurus of dogmas of the Sarvāstivādins is the Abhidharma-mahā-vibhāṣā-śāstra (Great Explanations of Theology),<sup>42</sup> which is a detailed commentary on the Abhidharma-jñānaprasthāna-śāstra. The Sanskrit original is lost; there is no Tibetan version, but there are two Chinese versions of the text, between which there are some discrepancies of dogmatical opinions. The translation by Hsüan-tsang amounts to two hundred volumes in Chinese binding. It is believed to have been compiled during the reign of King Kaniska.<sup>43</sup> It is likely that the Fourth Congress, in which it is said that this text was compiled, did not actually take place.<sup>44</sup> Of the two Chinese versions<sup>44'</sup> the later one by Hsüan-tsang is more detailed in explanation. We have also discovered some discrepancies between the two versions of this text in attributing peculiar theories to specific philosophers.<sup>45</sup> Various opinions are mentioned in this work.<sup>46</sup> Vasumitra, whose opinions are often cited in this text, was a famous person, being regarded as an authority by many groups.<sup>47</sup> However, we need not assume though the existence of many Vasumitras.<sup>48</sup> It is also difficult to assume the existence of many Dharmatrātas.<sup>49</sup> The Pañca-vastu-vibhāṣā-śāstra<sup>49'</sup> by Dharmatrāta, which is often cited in the Mahāvibhāṣā-śāstra, was an earlier work which paved way to the latter.<sup>50</sup> Buddhadeva, who, as a representative of the Sarvāstivādins, received the donation of a stūpa with the saṅghārāma, by a Śaka ruler, as is mentioned in the inscription of the Mathurā

<sup>42</sup> The older version is 阿毘曇毘婆沙論, 60 vols., Taisho, No. 1546. Translated into Chinese by Buddhavarman and others. This work has been traditionally ascribed to Kātyāyanīputra (1st century B.C.), but the latter must be the author of the Abhidharma-jñānaprasthāna-śāstra upon which this is a commentary. The new version is 阿毘達磨大毘婆沙論 200 vols., Taisho, No. 1545. Translated into Chinese in 656–659 A.D. by Hsüan-tsang. This work was translated into Japanese by Taiken Kimura, Giyū Nishi and Yukio Sakamoto in KIK. Bidonbu, vols. 7–17. There are some discrepancies between the two Chinese versions of the Mahāvibhāṣā-śāstra. (Kōshō Kawamura, IBK. vol. 15, No. 2, March 1967, pp. 95–99.) The passage concerning the controversy on time in the Vibhāṣā, 76, was translated into French and the features of the Sarvāstivāda were discussed by L. de La V. Poussin, MCB. vol. 5, 1937, pp. 1–158. The passage setting forth the concept of the two Truths in the Vibhāṣā, 77, was translated into French by L. de La V. Poussin, MCB. vol. 5, 1937, pp. 159–187.

<sup>43</sup> Taiken Kimura asserted that the Mahāvibhāṣā-śāstra was compiled some time after the reign of king Kaniska, probably in the middle of the 2nd century A.D. (阿毘達磨論の研究 Tokyo, Meiji Shoin, 1937, pp. 205–257.) But H. Ui does not adopt this opinion in his Indo Tetsugakushi.

Fach'ang has four other works to his credit. viz., Taisho, No. 255, 936, 1302, 2090. The Chinese version of the Pañcavastuka-vibhāṣā by Hsüan-tsang (Taisho, vol. 28, No. 1555) was rendered into Sanskrit by N. Lion Capital, must have been the Buddhadeva referred to in the Mahāvibhāṣā-śāstra.<sup>51</sup> An anthology of the Chinese version of the Mahāvibhāṣā was found in Central Asia.<sup>52</sup>

The Śāriputra-abhidharma-śāstra,<sup>53</sup> whose authorship is traditionally ascribed to Śāriputra, and whose sectarian standpoint is not clear, has a close relation to the Vibhajjavādins.<sup>54</sup> This treatise seems to have been composed and enlarged by the Vātsīputriyas after Aśoka. Some connection with the Mahāsaṅghikas is evident because it sets forth the theory that the mind (citta) is originally pure.<sup>55</sup> The Ārya-Vasumitra-saṅgiti-śāstra<sup>56</sup> is a treatise of the Sarvāstivādins,<sup>57</sup> but it includes the teachings of not only this school, but also of other schools.<sup>58</sup>

text discusses the significance of the individual existence (puḍgala) of a person. Sanskrit fragments (prior to the latter half of the 5th century A.D.) describing the Eight Great Hot Hells were found in Japan.<sup>66</sup> The scriptures which were first studied in China were those of Hīnayāna on meditation (dhyāna 禪定).<sup>67</sup>

Vasubandhu was a very important figure in the history of Indian Buddhism. Professor E. Frauwallner studied the records of this famous Buddhist philosopher to whom many works were ascribed. He asserted that there were two Vasubandhus, one of the Hīnayāna, the author of the Abhidharmakośa (A.D. 400–480), and the other of the Mahāyāna, who was Asaṅga's younger brother (A.D. 320–380). Prof. H. Sakurabe objects to this theory,<sup>68</sup> and on other grounds, Professor Hikata opines that Vasubandhu lived A.D. 400–480.<sup>69</sup> Dr. P.S. Jaini asserts that we are not justified in limiting the activities of the younger Vasubandhu to Hīnayāna alone, and that the date of the Kośakāra Vasubandhu and his relation to Asaṅga still remain unsettled.<sup>70</sup>

The best-known compendium of the doctrine of the Sarvāstivādins is Vasubandhu's<sup>70'</sup> Abhidharma-kośa-śāstra<sup>71</sup> (The Storehouse of Theology).<sup>72</sup>

The verse portion in Sanskrit of the Abhidharmakośa was discovered and published. Ed. by V. V. Gokhale, JBBRAS. NS. vol. 22. All the kārikās of the first three chapters of the Sanskrit original, the two Chinese versions and the Tibetan version are collated and translated into Japanese and English by professors of Ryūkyō University under the editorship of Prof. Ryōgon Fukuhara (梵本藏漢英和訳合璧阿毘達磨俱舍論本頌の研究—界品・根品・世間品—), Kyoto, Nagata Bunshōdō, March 1973, 649 pp.

<sup>72</sup> In China and Japan the standard work which formed the basis for the studies of this text was Hsüan-tsang's Chinese translation, 冠導阿毘達磨俱舍論, Taisho, No. 1558. This Chinese version was edited and translated into classical Japanese with annotations by Kyōkuga Saheki: Kandō Abidatsuma Kusharon (冠導阿毘達磨俱舍論), 10 vols., published by Nishimura Shichibei, Kyoto, 1886. An index to this edition was compiled by Suisai Funahashi and revised by Issai Funahashi: Kandō Abidatsuma Kusharon Sakuin (冠導阿毘達磨俱舍論索引). First published by Ōtani University, Kyoto, 1950, 302 pp. Revised edition: Kyoto, Hōzōkan, March 1956, 8+99 pp. Hsüan-tsang's Chinese version was translated into French by Louis de La Vallée Poussin, (L'Abhidharmakośa de Vasubandhu, Paris, Paul Geuthner; Louvain, J. B. Istas, 1923–1931, 6 vols.) Th. Stcherbatsky: The Soul Theory of the Buddhists, Pétersbourg 1920, BASR., pp. 823–958. The Chinese text was critically translated into Japanese in collation with Sanskrit fragments by Taiken Kimura and U. Wogihara in KDK. Ronbu. Retranslated, nearly in the same style by Giyū Nishi in KIK. vols. 25 and 26. Detailed studies on each chapter were published. Reviewed by Susumu Yamaguchi, Suzuki Nenpō, Nos. 5–7, 1968–1970, pp. 68–73. The third chapter (loka) was carefully and critically translated into Japanese by S. Yamaguchi and Issai Funahashi: Kusha-ron no Genten Kaimei, Seken-bon (俱舍論の原典解明. 世間品 Textual Study of Vasubandhu's Abhidharmakośa and Yaśomitra's Abhidharmakośavyākhyā), Kyoto Hōzōkan, Nov. 1955, 20+520+16+32 pp. It consists of two Japanese translations: the first is on the Tibetan translation of the chapter on loka (worlds) in Vasubandhu's Abhidharmakośa; the second is on the same chapter from Yaśomitra's Abhidharmakośavyākhyā. There is also a critical commentary which compares the two translations. Here the text of Wogihara is often corrected. The chapter on karman in Hsüan-tsang's version was critically commented on by Issai Funahashi: Gō no Kenkyū (業の研究 A Study on Karman), Kyoto, Hōzōkan, May 1954, (7+381+13 pp.), pp. 210–373. The main body of this work consists of kārikās, and Vasubandhu himself wrote a commentary<sup>72'</sup> in prose on the kārikās. In the original Kārikā text there were only 598 kārikās.<sup>72''</sup> From olden times there have been opinions that Vasubandhu wrote this work basing himself upon the standpoint of the Sautrāntikas; and that is why the Abhidharmakośa was criticized by orthodox Sarvāstivādins such as Saṅghabhadra.

All the passages in which the word kila ("it is reported that . . .") is used in the Abhidharmakośa virtually represent Vasubandhu's own opinion, dissenting from the orthodox theories of the Sarvāstivādins, and mostly agreeing with those of the Sautrāntikas.<sup>73</sup> It is likely that in composing the Kośa Vasubandhu was greatly influenced by Dharmasrī and Ghosaka.<sup>74</sup> Although it is problematic whether he faithfully represented the traditional doctrine of this school or not, this text has served as a good introduction to the doctrine in many Asiatic countries. The Sanskrit original has been found recently. Only one commentary by Yaśomitra in Sanskrit exists.<sup>75</sup> But there exist several commentaries on it in the Tibetan Tripiṭaka.<sup>76</sup> One of them, Śamathadeva's commentary has been clarified.<sup>77</sup>

This work of Vasubandhu was translated by Paramārtha and by Hien-tsang; of these, Paramārtha's version is more literal than Hien-tsang's.<sup>78</sup> Abstruse philosophical problems in the Abhidharmakośa were discussed among Chinese<sup>79</sup> and Japanese scholars for more than thousand years.<sup>80</sup>

The teachings in the Abhidharmakośa-śāstra are so highly technical and complicated that without the aid of synoptical exposition one cannot understand them. For this purpose expository works of the Japanese scholars are indispensable.<sup>81</sup> Well-known introductions to the doctrine of this text, written in the feudal days of Japan, were the Ushū Shichijūgohō ki<sup>82</sup> (A manual of the 75 dharmas of the Sarvāstivādins)<sup>83</sup> and the Ushū Shichijūgo-hō Myōmoku<sup>84</sup> (Explanations on the 75 dharmas of the Sarvāstivādins). Recent studies have made it clear that in composing this treatise Vasubandhu utilized to a great extent the Samyuktābhidharma-hṛdaya-śāstra.<sup>85</sup>

Vasubandhu's Abhidharmakośa evoked heated debate in the school. The work was criticized by his opponent Saṅghabhadra (alias Sahantabhadra)<sup>86</sup> in his work Abhidharma-Nyāyānusāra.<sup>87</sup> And he wrote another work Abhidharmakośa-samayapradīpikā,<sup>88</sup> to make clear the tenets of this school. The Sanskrit originals of both these texts are lost, but recently the Sanskrit text of the Abhidharmadīpa by Dipakāra, a follower of Saṅghabhadra, has been edited.

<sup>79</sup> e.g. 俱舍論記, 30 vols. Translated into Japanese by Giyū Nishi in KIK. Ronshūbu, vols. 1, 2 (till the 10th vol. up to now).

<sup>81</sup> Even such a master of Buddhist scholarship as Poussin did not write an exposition on the thought of the text, in the introduction to his French translation of the text; his introduction was merely historical and bibliographical. Japanese scholarship presents good introductory works, such as: Kendō Kajikawa, Kusharon Taikō (俱舍論大綱 Outline of Kośa-śāstra), 1908; revised 6th ed. April 1918, Tokyo, Komeisha, 5+169+4 pp. Shunichi Takagi: Kusha Kyōgi (俱舍教義 Teachings of the Kośa-śāstra), 1919. Reprint by Rinsen Shoten. Only the verses were explained by Suisai Funahashi, Kusharon Kōgi (俱舍論講義 Lectures on the Kośa-śāstra), in Daizōkyō Kōza (大藏經講座), No. 10, Tokyo, Toho Shoin, Feb. 1933, 8-572 pp.; Yuishin Saitō, Kusharon-ju Kōwa (俱舍論頌講話 Lectures on the verses of the Kośa-śāstra), Tokyo, Heigo Shuppansha, Feb. 1920, 2+9+465+2 pp. The structure of the whole text was discussed by Kyōdō Washio (鷲尾教導) in Rokujō Gakuho, Feb. 1912, p. 53 f.; by Suisai Funahashi in ibid., Jan., p. 11 ff; March, p. 56 f. In Japan there have been published a large number of expositions on the Abhidharma-kośa. They were mentioned exhaustively by Suisai Funahashi in Mujintō, Feb. 1912, p. 50 f.; May, p. 66 f.; Nov., p. 53 f. Masafumi Fukaura, Kushagaku Gairon (俱舍學概論 Outline of Abhidharma-kośa Practice), Kyoto, Hyakkaen, 1951. This was criticized by I. Funahashi in Ōtani Gakuho, pp. 32-44. The Genjō-gi Ryaku Mondō, 4 vols. (賢聖義略問答) by Chūzan 中算 (934-976) of Japan is a commentary upon K'uei-chi's 窺基 (631-682) Ērh-shihch'i-hsien-shêng-chang 二十七賢章. This is an important work of the Abhidharmakośa school of Japan. The first volume of this work was edited by Shōshin Fukihara ("賢聖義略問答の研究", Kyoto, Kiichirō Kanda, Feb. 1970). Based upon Japanese studies Rosenberg published an illuminating exposition: Otto Rosenberg (Aus dem Russischen übersetzt von Frau E. Rosenberg), Die Probleme der Buddhistischen Philosophie, Heidelberg, O. Harrassowitz, 1924. The doctrine of this text is so highly abstruse, that Japanese scholars have often resorted to various kinds of diagrams or charts which enable us to grasp the teachings of this treatise. Dokusan Ōshio made 4 charts of diagrammatical explanations which give a comprehensive survey of the teachings of the A. K. (Abidatsuma Kusharon Zuki 阿毘達磨俱舍論図記 Charts of the Abhidharmakośa, Tokyo, Daiyūkaku, 1934.)

It is likely that this work was composed between 450 and 550 A.D. Saṅghabhadra was called the "New Sarvāstivādin".<sup>89</sup> The content of this work coincides in many respects with that of the Nyāyānusāra, and it is very helpful for clarifying passages of the Chinese version of the latter.<sup>90</sup> The Abhidharmakośa of Vasubandhu had great influence on the thought of later Sarvāstivādins.<sup>91</sup> The Shēng-sē-chih-lun,<sup>92</sup> a Mongolian work by Hphags-pa the Lama, was chiefly based on the Abhidharma-kośa.<sup>93</sup> A good and concise introduction to the doctrine of this school is the Abhidharmāvatāra-prakarāṇa<sup>94</sup> by Skandhila.

The Lokotthānābhidharma-śāstra,<sup>95</sup> whose Sanskrit original was lost, and which was translated into Chinese by Paramārtha<sup>96</sup> in 559 A.D., is a work of Buddhist cosmology. Its standpoint is very close to that of the Sarvāstivādins, but not exactly the same. The Karmavibhaṅgopadeśa is a commentary on the Mahākarmavibhaṅga.<sup>97</sup> The Karma-Vibhaṅga-Upadeśa not only mentions the titles of other Buddhist Sanskrit texts but also often adds citations from these. Although these citations echo very faintly the wordings of the Sarvāstivāda, this text <sup>86</sup> Saṅghabhadra's epistemology was fully discussed in Genjun Sasaki's Abidatsuma Shisō Kenkyū (阿毘達磨思想研究 A study of Abhidharma Philosophy), Tokyo, Kōbundo, 1958, pp. 343 ff. Saṅghabhadra's thought is cited in the Tattvasamgraha, and its fragments here coincide fairly well with the theory of time (三世實有) in the Nyāyānusāra, according to the investigation by Mr. J. Kato.

The original text was translated into Tibetan also. But the Tibetan version looks like a commentary on the Abhidharmakośa, its contents being fairly different from the Chinese version. does not quote the canonical Sanskrit texts of this school.<sup>98</sup>

The Yogavidhi, whose Sanskrit fragments were published recently, also represents the thought of the Sarvāstivādins.<sup>99</sup> In a certain yoga book, Sanskrit fragments of which were found in Turfan, rules for meditation are set forth, by means of which a yogin becomes a bodhisattva, in spite of the fact that the standpoint of this treatise is Hīnayāna.<sup>100</sup>

A yoga text found in Qizil bears a close resemblance to the teachings of the Sarvāstivāda.<sup>101</sup> Vasuvarman, who composed the Catuḥsatya-nirdeśa, must have been later than Vasubandhu. He was a liberal thinker among the Sarvāstivādins.<sup>102</sup>

The Satyasiddhi-śāstra<sup>103</sup> by Harivarman, whose Sanskrit original is lost and only the Chinese translation<sup>104</sup> is available, is a peculiar work whose standpoint was often doubted as to whether it was Hīnayāna or Mahāyāna. This work is based on the traditional theory of the Four Noble Truths.<sup>105</sup> Examining the Nairātmya theory of the Satyasiddhi-śāstra one is led to the conclusion that the work belongs to the line of development of the Sautrāntikas.<sup>106</sup> But to some extent it is influenced by the Mādhyamika philosophy. According to this work, the teaching that 'everything exists' or 'everything does not exist' is nothing but an expediency, and is not the ultimate doctrine.<sup>107</sup> It is likely that the theory of the Three Aspects of Mind in the Satyasiddhi-śāstra worked as the origin to the theory of trisvabhāva in the system of the Yogācāra school.<sup>108</sup>

The earliest fragments of the Sautrāntika were found in Qizil, Central Asia, and have been deciphered.<sup>109</sup>

In Japanese temples many Sanskrit fragments of the Abhidharma texts were found which were lost to the continent of Asia. Some of them have been deciphered and published.<sup>110</sup> A Sanskrit manuscript preserved in the Shitennōji Temple in Osaka describes the tortures in hells. It is supposed to belong to the first half of the 5th century A.D.<sup>111</sup> Buddhist cosmology was systematically described on maps by medieval Japanese scholars in the feudal days.<sup>112</sup>

10.C. Later Southern Buddhism (Theravāda)

The Nettipakaraṇa<sup>1</sup> and the Peṭakopadesa<sup>2</sup>, the authorship of both of which has traditionally been ascribed to Mahākaccāyana, are placed outside of the Tipiṭaka. The former, the title of which means “The Book of Guidance (to the True Religion)”, is the earliest work which offers a methodical treatment of the teaching of the Buddha. Some Western scholars say that this was composed around the beginning of the Christian era. K. Midzuno conjectures that this work was originally not one of Pāli Buddhism, but that it later was adopted by it. It is reported that there exist six commentaries on the Nettipakaraṇa. The Nettipakaraṇa sets forth the sixteen ways of explanation or the sixteen categories (hāra) concerning the interpretation of scriptural passages.<sup>3</sup> The Peṭakopadesa, “Instruction of the Students of the Scriptures”, was composed before the 3rd century A.D. (i.e. prior to Nāgārjuna and the Vimuttimaggā.)<sup>4</sup>

For the study of the interchange of ideas between India and Greece, the main Greek materials are Ta Indika by Megasthenes and the Travel Records of Apollonius, and the main Indian material is Milindapañha<sup>5</sup> (“Questions of King Milinda”), in which the Buddhist

The Pāli text of the Milindapañha was translated into Japanese by Seishun Kanamori in Nanden, vol. 59 (parts 1 and 2); by H. Nakamura and K. Hayashima (Mirinda-ō no Toi ミリダ王の問い), 3 vols., Tokyo, Heibon-sha, Nov. 1963; March 1964; Oct. 1964, 386 pp.; 338 pp.; 412 pp. The work was translated, probably from the Sanskrit version, into Chinese by an anonymous translator; the Chinese version is called 那先比丘經, (3 vols., Taisho 1960), which was translated into Japanese by Ryūshō Hikata in KIK. Ronshūbu, vol. 2. The first portion of the Pāli text which coincides with the Chinese version seems to be the original form, and it was critically translated and discussed in reference to Greek thought by Hajime Nakamura: Indo Shisō to Girisha Shisō to no Kōryū (インド思想とギリシャ思想との交流 The Intercourse of Ideas between India and Greece). Published by Shunjūsha, Miyamotocho 10, Kanda, Tokyo, Dec. 1959, 6+8+404+32 pp. Its revised and enlarged edition is Indo to Girisha tōno Shisōkōryū (インドとギリシャとの思想交流, Tokyo, Shunjūsha, 1967. Selected Works by H. Nakamura, vol. 15). The remaining portion was translated by K. Hayashima, and the outcome was Mirinda-ō no Toi (ミリダ王の問い Questions of King Milinda), translated by H. Nakamura and K. Hayashima, 3 vols., monk Nāgasena discusses philosophical problems with the Greek king. Probably this can be said to be the most interesting work in prose of Theravāda. It is likely that the legend of Moggaliputta Tissa in the Samantapāsādikā influenced the legend of Nāgasena in the Milindapañha.<sup>6</sup> Various common philosophical problems, such as transmigration, knowledge, etc., were discussed in both. The problems should be analyzed and explained one by one.<sup>7</sup> Psychological theories propounded in the Milindapañha have not yet been systematized. They are parallel to those in the Pāli Seven Treatises and harbingers of those of the Northern Abhidharmas.<sup>8</sup> In the Milindapañha doubts are expressed about the god-like character of the Buddha, but the existence of the Buddha is strongly asserted.<sup>9</sup>

Also in this work some interesting dilemmas are discussed, such as: (a) If there is no soul, what is the nature of rebirth? (b) Why should a perfectly enlightened person, such as the Buddha, suffer and die? (c) What is meant by Truth? (d) What is wrong with philosophical discussion? (e) If life is suffering, why is suicide not a way out? (f) Why do the virtuous suffer and the wicked prosper? (g) Why there are textual contradictions?

There is a commentary on the Milindapañha called Milinda-Tikā. Its only existing manuscript was composed in the beginning or middle of the 13th century A.D., possibly later.<sup>10</sup>

It was quite natural that such a work was composed. Buddhist belief had already taken root even in Afghanistan. Two inscriptions in Graeco-Bactrian Cursive script found in Afghanistan mention the Buddhist formula of Adoration (namas) to Buddha.<sup>10'</sup>

In Ceylon in years of development after King Gāmaṇī "the entire Sinhalese race was united under the banner of the young Gāmaṇī. This was the beginning of nationalism among the Sinhalese. It was a new race with healthy young blood, organized under the new order of Buddhism. A kind of religio-nationalism, which almost amounted to fanaticism, roused the whole Sinhalese people. A non-Buddhist was not regarded as a human being."<sup>10''</sup>

In the growing order of Theravāda one could not help dissenters or heretics, if we are allowed to use such a term, appearing from time to time. In the later Buddhist order of Conservative Buddhism heretics or dissenters were called vitaṇḍāvādins and they are mentioned in the Sammohavinodini and Maṇḍipā.<sup>11</sup>

In order to keep unity of opinions, the Theravādins had to wait for the appearance of a great systematizer of theology till they finally found him in the person of Buddhaghosa (5th century A.D.), who was the greatest scholar of Southern Buddhism. He was an Indian monk from a Brahmin family of Gayā. He came to Ceylon to translate the commentaries back from Sinhalese to Pāli, the language of the canon.<sup>12</sup> He also wrote a compendium of the entire teaching of the canon, in one volume, entitled the Visuddhimagga.<sup>13</sup> This work was based on a previous work, the Vimuttimagga by Upatissa (1st century A.D.) in Pāli.<sup>14</sup> There is a Chinese<sup>15</sup> and a Tibetan version also of the same.<sup>16</sup>

Mr. Jion Abe submitted to the University of Poona a thesis entitled “A study on the First and Second Chapters of the Visuddhimagga and its Commentaries”.

It consists of the critical edition of the first and second chapters of the Cullaṭṭikā (Saṅkhepatthajotani), Commentary on the Visuddhimagga with an introductory essay.

There were other scholars known as Culla-Buddhaghosa,<sup>16'</sup> and they were four in all.<sup>16''</sup>

Buddhadatta (4th century A.D.)<sup>17</sup>, being a bhikkhu of South India, served as prime minister to Accuta Vikrama of the Kadamba dynasty. He wrote five works, among which the Jinālaṅkāra has been most famous. But his renown was surpassed by Buddhaghosa.

According to the results of elaborate studies it has been made clear that 1) Buddhaghosa was prior to Dharmapāla and other commentators, 2) among many works allegedly composed by Buddhaghosa the Visuddhimagga was the earliest one, and 3) the Paramatthajotikā, Dhammapadaṭṭhakathā, Jātakatṭhakathā and Pañcapakaraṇatṭhakathā, which have been traditionally ascribed to Buddhaghosa, are spurious.<sup>17'</sup>

In early Ceylon there were three separate schools (nikāyas) led by the three monasteries, Mahāvihāra, Abhayagiri and Jetavana. They were influenced by schools in the mainland of India.<sup>17''</sup> Popular beliefs in Ceylon were not immune to Mahāyāna ideas; some of them have been incorporated in the life of people.<sup>17'''</sup>

In the past Mahāyāna also flourished in Ceylon,<sup>18</sup> but in later days it was dispelled and finally disappeared. Theravāda replaced it.<sup>19</sup> The Mahāvihāra was the stronghold of Theravāda Buddhism, being the most important and biggest monastery in Anurādhapura.<sup>20</sup>

But Southern Buddhism acquired a magical character despite the prohibition of magical rites in early Buddhism. This tendency can also be noticed in other Buddhist countries of Southern Asia. Paritta Suttas are highly esteemed among contemporary Southern Buddhists.<sup>21</sup> Theravāda prevails in the countries of South-East Asia.<sup>22</sup> The Northern Abhidharma of the Sarvāstivādins was more progressive, whereas the Southern Abhidharma was exceedingly conservative. This is the reason why Mahāyāna did not originate in the tradition of Pāli Buddhism.<sup>23</sup>

Dhamma has been the central religious concept in the Theravāda tradition, the presence of which provides doctrinal coherence in the entire Theravāda system of thought and soteriological continuity from this life to that which transcends.<sup>23'</sup>

The history of Buddhism in the Anurādhapura period shows that the cult of the Buddha image was popular in Ceylon at least from the second century A.D., and there is an opinion that Ceylon produced free-standing Buddha images when Indian sculpture was mostly confined to bas-reliefs, and the former influenced the latter.<sup>23''</sup>

It seems that there were two types of monastic unit, i.e. "organic monastery" and "pabbata vihāra" in ancient Anurādhapura.<sup>23'''</sup>

Theravāda Buddhism developed a distinct historical awareness and saw the compilation of numerous chronicles beginning with the Dīpavaṃsa in the 4th century to the Sāsanaṃsa a little more than a century ago.<sup>23''''</sup> There exist several chronicles<sup>24</sup> in Ceylon, such as the Dīpavaṃsa<sup>25</sup> and Mahāvaṃsa,<sup>26</sup> which are valuable for historical studies. An earlier form of the Dīpavaṃsa was composed in the 1st or 2nd century A.D.<sup>27</sup> The extended version of the Mahāvaṃsa was transmitted to Cambodia.<sup>28</sup> By and large, historical certitude was not deliberately sacrificed for religious purposes as was likely to happen.

Any event that occurred after the two great chronicles in Ceylon is included in the Cūlavāṃsa ("The Little History").<sup>29</sup> It consists of a series of addenda, written by several scholars, and serves as a continuation of the Mahāvaṃsa. The Sīhalavaththupakaraṇa is an old collection of 77 Buddhist stories derived from the time of King Aśoka through the first century B.C., with the principal portion and the supplementary portion compiled after the 4th century A.D. This work is a valuable source for the study of ancient India and Ceylon.<sup>29'</sup> Modern historical works follow the old pattern. The Sāsana-vamsa<sup>30</sup> ("The History of the Doctrine") was written in Burma in 1861 by the monk Paññasāmi.

Abhidhamma scholarship continued for many centuries, and many philosophical and psychological works were composed. Among them the most important is probably the Abhidhammattha-saṅgaha<sup>31</sup> written by the monk Anuruddha (around 12th century). Even nowadays this manual is held in great esteem in Ceylon as well as in Burma. The Abhidhammamūlaṭikā is a noteworthy text.<sup>31'</sup> The Yogāvacara<sup>32</sup> is a manual for meditation. The Pāli text entitled Dhammakāya or Dhammakāyassa Atthavaṇṇanā<sup>33</sup> is an opuscle belonging to the same school as the Yogāvacara's manual. The Simālankārasaṅgraha, allegedly compiled by Vācissara (13th century), a Ceylonese monk, aims at introducing in abridged form the main teachings on the subject of Simā, a demarcated area.<sup>33'</sup>

Layman ethics was also taught. The Upāsakajanālaṅkāra<sup>34</sup> is the most comprehensive Pāli manual dealing with the Buddha's teachings for the layman. The author is supposed to be one named Ānanda (12th century). Transference of merit that has been acquired by one to another by his wish (called parivaṭṭa)<sup>34'</sup> has been extolled in Ceylonese Buddhism.

In the Upāsakajanālaṅkāra<sup>34+α</sup> the three ways of liberation are admitted:

- 1) sāvaka-bodhi
- 2) pacceka-bodhi
- 3) samyaksambodhi

This classification (triyāna) can be traced back to the Nidhikaṇḍa-sutta Khuddaka-pāṭha<sup>34+β</sup>, although it appears in its incipient stage. Finally, the three Ways were admitted in the Lotus Sūtra, the Yogācārabhūmi, and other texts. In the Theravāda also the ideal of the bodhisattva is set forth, being mentioned in Pali texts and inscriptions, although the con-

In other Buddhist countries also various works were composed.<sup>35</sup> The Traibhūmikathā<sup>36</sup> ("The History of the Three Worlds") composed by King Lüt'ai of Siam in 1345, is a kind of cosmological work written in Siamese but based entirely on Pāli works. In Siam Pāli texts were composed. At least twenty-four of them have been known; some of them are secular.<sup>37</sup> Aggavaṃsa (13th A.D.) of Burma composed the Saddanīti, a grammar of Pāli.<sup>38</sup> The Abhidhamma traditions have been lost in Ceylon, while they continue to flourish in Burma. The gap between these two may be filled by Kassapa's Mohavicchedanī.<sup>39</sup> The author was a native of Cola country of South India between the end of the 12th and beginning of the 13th century A.D.

11. Philosophical Thought

The Sarvāstivādins propagated new teachings which had not existed in early Buddhism<sup>1</sup>. Concepts of early Buddhism were elaborated in the Abhidharma literature. 'Non-permanence' in the Abhidharma means, to be limited and conditioned by the four saṃskṛta-lakṣaṇa.<sup>2</sup> Enlightenment is finally attained by annulling Nescience (avidyā),<sup>3</sup> as in early Buddhism, but the essence of Nescience in the Abhidharma is neither mere volition, nor mere intellect.<sup>4</sup>

The knowledge by cognition, according to the doctrine of the Sarvāstivādins, is based on existing objects (sālabhāna), in contrast to the Dārṣṭāntika's view that the things (dharmas) which do not exist as substances (dravyasat) also can be objects of cognition.<sup>5</sup> Discriminative knowledge is possible with regard to non-existent objects.<sup>6</sup>

The Theravāda and the Sarvāstivāda denied the possibility that the cognition of one moment (kṣaṇa) can know itself; whereas the Mahāsaṅghika admitted it, saying that the cognition which is the subject can also be the object of the same cognition. The Yogācāra school inherited the latter's opinion.<sup>7</sup>

The sectarian theologians of the Sarvāstivāda adopted the theory of Non-ego<sup>8</sup> (puḍgalanairātmya) and of the existence of things as substances (dravyasat of dharma).<sup>9</sup> The existence of things as substances can be predicated of only dharmas; it is distinguished from: (1) being in the natural world (prajñaptisat)<sup>10</sup> (as can be said of men, women, jars, clothes, wheels, troops, woods and houses), (2) relative being (as can be said of 'long and short', 'this and that'), (3) nominal being, i.e. a concept which includes a contradiction in itself (as can be said of 'hair of a tortoise', 'a horn of a horse', 'a child of a barren woman'), and (4) con-glomerational being (as can be said of an 'individual person', 'pudgala').<sup>11</sup> Thus dravyasat does not mean the existence of things in the ordinary sense, but their existence as transcendental substances which manifest themselves in the process of time.<sup>12</sup> A substance in this sense was called dravya or vastu (vatthu).<sup>13</sup>

Later Sarvāstivādins made another distinction between two kinds of being, i.e., being in the ultimate sense (paramārthasat) and being in the conventional sense (saṃvrtisat)<sup>13'</sup>. By accepting the double meaning of the term dharma, they teach that a dharma is an attribute, insofar as it has an owner (dharmin), and that it is at the same time a substance (dravya), insofar as the owner of the dharma is conventionally supposed (prajñapti). A dharma is called artha or viśaya, insofar as it is an object of knowledge.<sup>14</sup>

Dharmas as transcendental substances subsist throughout the lapse of time, i.e., the past, present and future.<sup>15</sup> Their appearances change,<sup>16</sup> but the essential nature (svabhāva)<sup>17</sup> of dharmas does not change.

Then what is it that appears and disappears in time?<sup>17'</sup> This problem was highly controversial among those Japanese monastic scholars who represented this scholarly tradition. The scholars of the Kōfukuji Temple (Northern Temple) advocated the view that it is the essence (体) of a dharma that appears and disappears, whereas the scholars of the Gangōji Temple (Southern Temple) held the view that it is the function (用) of a dharma that appears and disappears.<sup>18</sup>

Throughout the history of psychological thought in the Abhidharma literature there were two currents. One regarded mind (citta)<sup>19</sup> as primary with mental functions (caitta) as

The classification of all dharmas into the Five Skandhas was inherited by Abhidharma theologians,<sup>21</sup> but they were termed as samskṛtas by the Sarvāstivādins.

The classification of all the dharmas into five classes (五位)<sup>22</sup> was brought about by the Sarvāstivādins.

The Five Classes of Dharmas:

1) Matter ( rūpa ). Matter is divided into primary ( bhūta = mahābhūta ) and secondary ( bhautika )	11
2) Consciousness ( viññāna )	1
3) Mental Forces ( caitta-dharma, citta-samprayukta-samskāras )	46
4) Elements which are neither matter nor mental forces ( citta-viprayukta-samskāras )	14
5) Immutable elements ( asamskṛta )	3
Total	75

The first among these five, matter (rūpa) has eight characteristics,<sup>23</sup> according to the Sarvāstivāda; the unmanifested karma was thought to be a variety of matter.<sup>24</sup>

The Sarvāstivādins classified rūpa 'the visible' into two: color (varṇa) and shape (samsthāna), and admitted eight kinds of samsthāna.<sup>25</sup> The concept of the Ten Mahābhūmikā dharmāḥ was first advanced by the philosopher Vasumitra.<sup>26</sup> It was propounded in the Dhātukāyapāda and the Prakaraṇapāda.<sup>27</sup> The word 'caitta'<sup>28</sup> (mental function) was not used in early Buddhism, but later in Buddhist sects.<sup>29</sup> Mental defilements (kleśa) were enumerated.<sup>30</sup> The theory of caitta in the Abhidharma-kośa was the ingenious thought of Vasubandhu who set forth the anityabhūmi dharma for the first time.<sup>31</sup> Whereas the Sarvāstivādins enumerated 46 caittas, the Visuddhimagga enumerated 53,<sup>32</sup> and there are many other differences of this nature.<sup>33</sup> The concept of cittaviṣayukta dharma came into existence for the first time in the Abhidharma<sup>34</sup> of the Sarvāstivādins.

Kumāralāta, the philosopher, asserted that even pleasant feeling (sukhā vedanā) is nothing but unpleasant feeling, for the former gives rise to the latter (duḥkhā vedanā). This theory was refuted by the Sarvāstivādins.<sup>34'</sup>

One of the most important factors which distinguishes the Vaibhāṣika Abhidharma from the Theravāda Abhidharma is a category called the viprayukta-saṃskāras.<sup>35</sup> In this category, syllables, words and sentences are included, which were all admitted their own existence through time.<sup>36</sup>

Thinkers of Conservative Buddhism merely enumerated dharmas, but did not consistently systematize them. It was in China and Japan that all the dharmas mentioned in the Abhidharmakośa were fixed to 75.<sup>37</sup>

The set of twenty-two indriyas was fixed in the period of the Hīnayāna Sects, or immediately before that.<sup>38</sup>

All the dharmas are interrelated to each other by means of conditions or relations (pratyayas). In the Abhidharma literature various systems of pratyayas were formed.<sup>39</sup> Relations between things can be viewed by means of twenty-four respects. This is called Paṭṭhāna-naya in the Abhidhammatthasaṅgaha VIII.<sup>40</sup>

The concept of karma differs with sects. The problem of karma came to be discussed in Theravada.<sup>40'</sup> The karma of the Sarvāstivādins was, so to speak, a sort of material substance.<sup>41</sup> The Sarvāstivādins admitted a kind of karma called "the karma not made known" (avijñapti-karma).<sup>41'</sup> It should be explained as 'a kind of habit acquired under a vow'.<sup>42</sup> It is a link which connects an act and its fruition, lasting till the fruit becomes ripe.<sup>43</sup> It has the function to prevent bad actions when it is of good character, and to annul its consequences when it is of bad character.<sup>44</sup> This school admitted transmigration.<sup>45</sup> The "Essence of Discipline'<sup>46</sup> was a topic of heated debate among Hinayāna theologians. The Essential Bodies of Precepts (戒体)<sup>47</sup> were regarded as something material by the Sarvāstivādins. The Sarvāstivādins acknowledged them to be a kind of avijñaptirūpa, whereas the Sautrāntikas refuted the theory.<sup>48</sup>

The concept of 'good' was not made clear in early Buddhism but was discussed in fuller detail later on.<sup>49</sup> The criteria by which to distinguish good and bad was much debated by the Abhidharma theologians. As a whole, nirvāṇa was regarded as good, and anything contrary to it as bad.<sup>50</sup>

Buddhist cosmology grew to be highly elaborate.<sup>51</sup> The Sarvāstivādins entertained the concept of atoms,<sup>52</sup> but apparently it was refuted by Buddhist idealism.<sup>53</sup> The theory of the Three World-Spheres took shape, not in the scriptures, but among the Hinayāna sects.<sup>54</sup> The theory of various hells developed in full details. Some Sanskrit manuscripts depicting the condition of hells have been preserved in Japan.<sup>55</sup>

In the philosophy of the Sarvāstivādins the meaning of avidyā<sup>55'</sup> is not clear and not consistent. With the development of the system it came finally to mean "unreasonable application of mind" (ayoniśomanaskāra). Throughout Conservative Buddhism, faith (śraddhā) was regarded as the gateway to the understanding of the Buddhist teaching.<sup>56</sup>

Buddhist sects enjoined the practice of meditation.<sup>57</sup> The process of the way of meditation was set forth in various ways by different schools.<sup>57'</sup> The differentiation in the three samādhis was minutely discussed by the Sarvāstivādins.<sup>58</sup> Meditation gives rise to wisdom

The Sarvāstivādins and other schools admitted the Three Vehicles,<sup>66</sup> i.e., the Vehicle of Buddhas, that of Pratyekabuddhas, and that of Śrāvakas; this idea played the key note in the Lotus Sutra in later days. It was admitted by the Sarvāstivādins that Śrāvakas, Pratyekabuddhas, and Bodhisattvas could change their ways (yānas) to observe other ways.<sup>67</sup>

In early Buddhism "asamkhata" meant nirvāṇa or the state of liberation, whereas in the Abhidharma literature of the Sarvāstivādins it came to mean permanent, not-changing entities.<sup>68</sup>

Since Buddhists embraced the theory of Non-ego, then what is the subject of liberation? What is liberated?<sup>69</sup> It is one's own Mind (citta) that is liberated, and this citta is pure by itself according to the teaching of early Buddhism.<sup>70</sup> In the age of Conservative Buddhism there were some who asserted that the fundamental principle of the individual existence was the one citta.<sup>71</sup> The Sautrāntikas<sup>72</sup> admitted the existence of the eka-rasa-skandhas, which were interpreted as 'bījas of one taste.'<sup>73</sup>

This kind of thought, especially that of Purity of Mind by Origin was current even up to later Buddhist Idealism.<sup>74</sup> Anyhow, in one way or the other Hīnayānists had to admit the existence of the subject of transmigration.<sup>75</sup>

What is the subject of transmigration? The Sarvāstivādins had to admit the intermediate existence (antarābhava).<sup>75</sup> The Vātsīputriyas admitted the existence of a puḍgala as the subject of transmigration.<sup>76</sup> The Sautrāntika school denied the authority of Abhidharma and admitted only that of the Sūtras.<sup>77</sup> According to Non-Buddhist literature, the Sautrāntikas are said to have admitted the existence of the external world.<sup>78</sup> Yogasena (c. 650–700 A.D.), whose thoughts were cited by Kamalaśīla, probably belonged to the Sāṃmitīya or Vātsīputriya school. This proves that even after Dharmakīrti, some Hīnayāna schools were still flourishing besides the Sarvāstivādins and the Sautrāntikas.<sup>79</sup> These two major schools were severely criticized by Hindu orthodox scholars such as Śaṅkara.<sup>80</sup>

12. Biographies of the Buddha

Even among Hinayānists the Buddha was already glorified and deified. The biographies of the Buddha were at first included in the Vinaya texts,<sup>1</sup> but later they became independent works.<sup>2</sup>

The Mahāvastu,<sup>3</sup> 'The Great Story', is an old Buddhist Sanskrit text written in what is called Hybrid Sanskrit. It describes the life of Buddha Śākyamuni, according to the text of the Lokottarvādin branch of the Mahāsaṅghika. The existing version of the Mahāvastu seems to have been affected by some confusion or mix-up. Dr. Kōgen Midzuno tried to restore the order of the sections in the original text.<sup>4</sup> The date of the work has not yet been fixed, but it was perhaps around the 2nd century B.C. In the Mahāvastu four Buddhas preceding Śākyamuni are mentioned.<sup>5</sup> With the lapse of time many Buddhas were supposed to have existed before Śākyamuni.<sup>6</sup> Forty Jātakas are incorporated in the Mahāvastu. But the stores of the Buddha in his former birth by his pūrva-praṇidhāna are not called jātaka.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The development of the biographies of the Buddha was discussed in detail by D. Tokiwa and K. Mino in the introduction to the Japanese translation of the Fo-pan hhih-tsi-ing, KIK. Honenbu, vol. 3, 1957, pp. 9–14; pp. 111–133, pp. 137–145 were translated into German by Ernst Leumann and S. Shiraishi in Proceedings of the Faculty of Liberal Arts and Education, Yamanashi University, No. 3, 1962, pp. 79–149. The chapter on "Hells" in the Mahāvastu was discussed by Shoko Watanabe in Bukkyō Gakuto, Taishō Daigaku, 1933. This article was criticized by U. Wogihara (Unrai Bunshū). Cf. R. Yamada, Bongo Butten, pp. 66–67. The portion of the Bahubuddha-sūtra is missing in its counterpart in the Buddha-pūrvacaryā-saṃgraha-sūtra (仏本行集經). In the Mahāvastu (ii, 362. 16–397.4) the worship of stūpas is extolled, but there is no mention of Buddha images or of copying scriptures.<sup>8</sup> In this work the theory of mahātman is taught by explaining the superhuman character of the Buddha. This can be regarded as an antecedent to the thought of Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra of Mahāyāna.<sup>9</sup>

There are quite a number of literary works extolling the life of the Buddha. As their originals are lost, we are not quite sure whether they were written in Hybrid Sanskrit or in classical Sanskrit.

(1) Shi'rh-yiu-ching (十二遊經).<sup>10</sup> This work was probably composed in the 1st century A.D. It is a biography depicting the activities of the Buddha during the 12 years after his Enlightenment. It contains unique stories which cannot be found in other scriptures.

(2) Chung-pên-ch'i-ching (中本起經).<sup>11</sup> This work depicts the life of the Buddha after his Enlightenment.

(3) Kuo-chü-hsien-tsai-yin-kuo-ching (過去現在因果經).<sup>12</sup>

(4) The Mahāsaṃmata-sūtra.<sup>13</sup> This work highly resembles the Tibetan version of the Life of Buddha translated by Rockhill.<sup>14</sup>

(5) Seng-kiê-lo-khâ-su-tsi-fo-hhin-ching (僧伽羅刹所集佛行經).<sup>15</sup> This work is said to have been composed by Saṅgharakṣa. This biography of the Buddha describes the places where the Buddha lived in each of the 45 years after his Enlightenment.

Fragmentary biographies were enlarged, put together and finally complete biographies were compiled:

(1) The Lalitavistara<sup>16</sup> and the Fân-kwân-tâ-kwân-yen-ching (方廣大莊嚴經)<sup>17</sup>. The latter work corresponds to the 27 chapters of the former. The whole work is permeated with the exuberance of religious emotion, being influenced by Mahāyāna. The P'u-yao-ching<sup>17'</sup> (普曜經) is a shorter text also corresponding to the Lalitavistara.

(3) The Buddha-carita. This work will be discussed later.

There are some hymns (Stotra) extolling the Buddha or Buddhas, e.g., the Ārya-mañjuśrī-nāmāṣṭaśataka<sup>19</sup> and the Saptajinastava.<sup>20</sup>

Sanskrit preserved the Anuruddha-śataka, the Bhaktiśataka and the Lokeśvara-śataka. The Anuruddha-śataka is a collection of 101 hymns in praise of the Buddha, composed by Anuruddha (12th century A.D.) probably in Ceylon, after he went there from India.<sup>21</sup> The Lokeśvara-śataka by Vajradatta extolls Lokeśvara Buddha.<sup>22</sup> The Mitrakastotra is ascribed to Dignāga.<sup>23</sup> Fo-chi-hsing-tê-tsan (佛吉祥德讚 Buddha-śrīguṇa-stotra?) by 寂友 (Munimitra?),<sup>24</sup> lauds the virtues of the Buddha. Fo-san-shên-tsan (佛三身讚 Buddhatrikāyastotra), whose author is unknown, extolls the dharmakāya, the sambhogakāya, and the nirmāṇakāya of the Buddha.<sup>25</sup>

13. The Poet Āśvaghōṣa and his School

Āśvaghōṣa<sup>1</sup> a Buddhist poet, was the creator of epic, dramatic and lyrical compositions. He is regarded as one of the most prominent poets in Sanskrit literature. He could almost be called the most important predecessor of Kālidāsa. The traditions embodied in the Chinese and Tibetan sources agree in asserting that Āśvaghōṣa was a contemporary of King Kanīṣka (2nd century A.D.). He was generally included among the leaders or founders of Mahāyāna by Chinese and Japanese Buddhists, but recently it has often been supposed by scholars that he belonged to the Sarvāstivādins; however things are yet not clear. It has been found out that there was a close relation between him and the Satyasiddhi.<sup>2</sup> In his works epic influence can be noticed.<sup>3</sup>

Although traditionally thirty seven works in all are ascribed to Āśvaghōṣa,<sup>4</sup> masterpieces of his literary works are as follows:

(1) The Buddha-carita (The Acts of Buddha).<sup>5</sup> This indeed is a great epic of the Buddha, filled with intense love and reverence for the exalted figure of the Buddha. The existing Sanskrit manuscripts are incomplete, whereas the Chinese version is complete. It seems that some passages of this text were incorporated in the original of the Fo-so-hsing-tsan.<sup>6</sup>

[Japanese Studies] The Sanskrit text of the Buddhacarita was translated into Japanese by Tsūshō Byōdo:

(2) The Saundarananda-kāvya.<sup>7</sup> This work was probably composed earlier than the Buddha-carita and belongs to the class of ornate court poetry, using occasionally a style of ornate pun.<sup>8</sup> It is also connected with the life story of the Buddha but amplifies those scenes and episodes in particular which receive scanty attention or none at all in the Buddha-carita. Its theme is the legend of the conversion of the reluctant Nanda, the half-brother of the Buddha. The syntactic construction of Kāvya poetry in the Saundarananda is simple. But in the description of the Buddha's family lineage (in Canto I), Aśvaghōṣa's creative talent excels in his poetic arrangement of the historical materials regarding his ancestors.<sup>9</sup> The genealogy of Lord Buddha is here related in a more glorified and elaborate fashion than in the Mahāvastu.<sup>10</sup> The actual theme of this poem is the story of the love-lorn Nanda. The thought represented in the work is not different from that of Hīnayāna in general, but harbingers the advent of Mahāyāna in the teachings of the Great Compassion of Buddha, faith in the Buddha, the expediencies employed by the Buddha and the origination of infatuation by false assumption.<sup>11</sup> Benevolence (maitrī) and compassion (karuṇā) are stressed.<sup>12</sup>

(3) Sūtrālaṅkāra.<sup>13</sup> This work, which was translated into Chinese by Kumārajīva in about 405 A.D., was ascribed by Chinese authors to Aśvaghōṣa. But it has been asserted that this text was actually written by Aśvaghōṣa's junior contemporary Kumāralāta, and the Sanskrit original bore the title Kalpanāmanditikā or Kalpanālamkrtikā. Sanskrit fragments were found in Qizil and published by Lüders.<sup>14</sup>

(4) Śāriputra-prakarana.<sup>15</sup> This drama treats the conversion of Śāriputra and his friend Maudgalyāyana.

(5) Gaṇḍistotra-gāthā.<sup>16</sup> This poem is well known for its beauty of style and contents.

The Rāstrapāla-nāṭaka, a play, is ascribed by Jains to Āśāḍhabhūti, by Buddhists to Āśvaghōṣa. There must have been a common source to both of them.<sup>17</sup>

The Gurusevādharmapañcāśadgāthā or the Gurupañcāśikā,<sup>18</sup> ascribed to Āśvaghōṣa, propounds the duty and virtue of serving one's teacher (guru) teaching the ways how to revere his master (guru) by their disciples.<sup>19</sup>

The Vajrayānamūlāpattisamgraha, another work of similar kind, was also ascribed to him. The Vajrasūci (cf. infra), the Stūlāpatti, the Daśākuśalakarmapathāḥ, the Ṣaḍgatikārikā,<sup>19'</sup> the Nairātmya-pariprcchā and the Tridaṇḍamālā etc., were also, maybe spuriously, ascribed to Āśvaghōṣa.<sup>20</sup> Āśvaghōṣa was influenced by the Rāmāyana.<sup>21</sup>

Another poet, who belonged to the same school of poetry, was Mātrceta (2nd century A.D.).<sup>22</sup> He too was a contemporary of King Kanīṣka. The Mahārāja-Kanika-lekha,<sup>23</sup> which exists only in the Tibetan version, is ascribed to Mātrceta. This is an epistle to King Kanīṣka, teaching him how a king should conduct himself. Kanīṣka, who was his contemporary, may have been the King Kanīṣka II. He<sup>24</sup> wrote the Śatapañcāśatika-stotra<sup>25</sup> and the Catuḥśataka-stotra (or Varṇārhavarṇa).<sup>26</sup> The most conspicuous feature of the latter is the glorification of dharma. The Anaparāddha-stotra is also ascribed to him.<sup>27</sup> His fundamental thought inherited the theory of the Two Truths and the Voidness of Nāgārjuna. He extolls the infinite virtues of the Buddha, exhorting devotional faith in the Buddha. But he made a compromise to Hindu orthodoxy by praising Brahmins and Savitṛ and by declaring that

The Jātaka-mālā ("Garland of Jātakas")<sup>30</sup> by the poet Śūra or Āryaśūra<sup>31</sup> resembles very closely the Kalpanāmaṇḍitikā as far as style is concerned. This work contains 34 Jātakas. The first half (chapters I-VIII) of the Jātaka portion of the Chinese version<sup>32</sup> of this text corresponds to the Sanskrit Jātakamālā, whereas the latter half (chapters IX-XIV) contains other Jātaka stories. The latter part of the Chinese version (vols. X-XVI) contains sporadic theological discussions. It was traditionally believed that the P'u-sa-pên-shêng-man-lun (菩薩本生鬘論), in 16 vols., (Taisho, vol. 3, p. 33 la-385 c) was a Chinese translation of Āryaśūra's Jātakamālā, but recent studies have made clear that it is nothing but a pseudo-translation of the text.<sup>33</sup> The Chinese version seems to be a collection of works by various writers, including Āryaśūra.<sup>33'</sup>

The Subhāṣitaratna-Karaṇḍakakathā is an early work of Āryaśūra.<sup>34</sup> Āryaśūra also wrote another work called Pāramitāsāra.<sup>35</sup>

King Harṣavardhana (or Śilāditya 600-647 A.D.),<sup>36</sup> during whose reign the Chinese pilgrim Hsüan-tsang came to India, leaned more and more strongly towards Buddhism in his advanced age. He composed a Suprabhāta-stotra, a morning hymn in praise of the Buddha in 24 verses, and the Aṣṭa-mahā-śrī-caitya-stotra, a hymn extolling the Eight Great Shrines in 5 stanzas.<sup>37</sup> He also left dramatical works such as the Nāgānanda, the Ratnāvalī and the Priyadarśikā. The Naiṣadhīya-carita, as well as the Suprabhāta-stotra, were also ascribed to him.<sup>38</sup>

14. The Avadāna Literature<sup>1</sup>

The Avadāna<sup>2</sup> texts stand, so to speak, with one foot in the Hīnayāna literature, and the other in the Mahāyāna literature. The earlier works belong entirely to the Hīnayāna literature, and the other in the Mahāyāna are completely Mahāyānistic, although they expound Buddha worship. The word “avadāna” means “a glorious event”.<sup>3</sup>

The contents of the “Sūtra on Five Hundred Disciples Telling their own Nidānas” (佛五百弟子自說本起經)<sup>4</sup> correspond considerably to those of the Pāli Avadānas. The process of the development of the Avadāna literature can be put in the following three stages:

- 1) Old prose Avadāna literature.
- 2) Avadāna literature in poetical form.
- 3) Later prose Avadāna literature.

The last one has the following four classes:

- 1) Avadāna-śataka and its remodellings: Kalpadrūmāvadānamālā and Ratnāvadānamālā. Also Vicitrakarṇikāvadāna.
- 2) Aśokāvadānamālā.
- 3) Vratāvadānamālā, a mosaic work of various traditions.<sup>5</sup>
- 4) Divyāvadāna and Divyāvadānamālā.<sup>6</sup>

Some avadāna stories were called “engi” (縁起) in Central Asia, China and Japan.<sup>7</sup>

The oldest of these books in Sanskrit is probably the Avadāna-śataka,<sup>8</sup> (“The Hundred Avadānas”). It consists of ten decades, each one of which deals with a certain subject. The tendency of the stories is Hīnayānistic. The Sanskrit original has more developed forms than the Chinese version.<sup>9</sup> The Kalpadrūmāvadānamālā, the Aśokāvadāna-mālā<sup>9</sup> etc., belong to

A Sanskrit fragment of Vimānāvadāna corresponds to some verses of the Vimānavatthu.<sup>19'</sup>

There are five texts concerning the legend of Kavikumāra, including the Kavikumārāvadāna.<sup>20</sup> The Suvarṇavarṇāvadāna (金色童子因緣經) is a collection of Avadāna stories told by Ānanda to the boy Suvarṇavarṇa.<sup>20'</sup>

An extensive Avadāna work was written by Kṣemendra, the Kashmirian poet. This is the Avadāna-kalpalatā, which was completed in 1052 A.D., and was held in great esteem especially in Tibet. He was a prolific writer.<sup>21</sup> middle Ganges.<sup>3</sup> Huviṣka, Vāsudeva and other kings followed him.<sup>4</sup> Samarkand, Ki-pin (罽賓) and the people called Ta-yüe-che (大月氏)<sup>5</sup> were identified by means of critical studies.<sup>6</sup> The dynasty of Kidāra Kuṣāṇas or Little Yue-chi was established in Bactria after 402 A.D. and the dynasty in Gandhāra was destroyed by the Ephthals in between 477 and c. 500 A.D.<sup>7</sup>

The Periplus Maris Erythraei provided interesting material on the commercial intercourse between India and Rome, and was introduced to Japanese scholars with a critical translation full of annotations in 1946.<sup>8</sup> Inscriptions have been compiled and published, because they are of great importance in historical studies.<sup>9</sup> It has been asserted that the historical personage referred to in Śūdraka's Mṛcchakaṭika is Vindhyaśakti, the founder of the Vākāṭaka dynasty (3rd century A.D.)<sup>10</sup> Approximately around the time of the rise of the Kuṣāṇa dynasty, monarchs came to be deified.<sup>11</sup> From this time on, the power and prestige of local kings increased, and monarchs were ascribed divine right. At first, the Hindu religion, with its concept of the state based on caste and on the dominating race, found itself in contradiction with the greater power of kings and the greater power of Brahmins. But the solution was political, and the divine character of the king, who had been designated by God, was confirmed and exalted.<sup>12</sup> The Indian version of the Divine Right of Kings was thus established in Brahmin law books.

12) It is interesting to note that this Hindu conception of regality influenced some currents of Buddhism passing to Japan, where the respect due to the Emperor was justified by means of this Hindu belief. (H. Nakamura: The Ways of Thinking of Eastern Peoples, in Eng., The Japanese National Commission for Unesco, Tokyo, 1960, pp. 386 ff.)

But the Hindu concept of reality could not be accepted by Buddhism, which advocated clemency and equality against despotism and caste. Buddhists then attacked and modified the concept; and they denied the state absolutism. For Buddhism, the king, although he holds an enormous power in his hands, is only a man, and should be considered like other men, and should obey eternal law like other men. The significance of religion should be placed on a higher level than that of the king. Therefore, the king should take counsel from religious men on matters of conduct because to follow their teachings is to do good. On the other hand, men of religion, even though they receive aid and protection from the king, are not obliged either to obey him or respect him. Thus, the principle of independence of a religious order is to be maintained.

The theory of the perpetuity of the state was criticized and rejected by Mahāyāna Buddhists. For Buddhists, the state was only a temporary existence made up of components without which it would cease to exist. It is, therefore, a creation of man and, as such, transitory, and must be put below superior religious interests. But this line of reasoning led some Buddhist thinkers to discuss political problems. The task of the state must be to assure the observance of religious norms. A good sovereign should calculate the interests of his subjects and they must wholeheartedly obey him. His actions should be inspired by clemency and altruism.

The social background of Buddhism under the Kushan rule has received attention.<sup>13</sup> Buddhism of that time, both Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna, was of an extremely international character. The Buddhist monks who came to China between 148 A.D. and 400 A.D. were from India, Kāśmīra, Parthia, Samarkand, and Tchia.<sup>14</sup> Quite a number of cave temples were built along the west coast of India, and were financially supported by religiously devoted traders and landlords.<sup>15</sup> Buddhist intercourse between India and China flourished in those days, and six ways of contact were made clear.<sup>16</sup> The Sarvāstivādins diffused the gospel of Buddhism among foreign peoples in North-western India, speaking foreign languages.<sup>17</sup>

Gandhāra arts came into existence in the first century A.D., flourished till the end of the reign of Vāsudeva (c. 230 A.D.), and continued to exist in spite of its decline.<sup>18</sup> Mathurā was then another big center of Buddhist art.<sup>19</sup> In Mathurā and Gandhāra there have been found many Buddhist inscriptions dating from the reign of the Greeks, the Sakas, the Parthians and the Kuṣāṇas. They reveal various facts of great importance for the history of Indian Buddhism.<sup>20</sup> The details of the Buddhist order under the Kushāṇa rule were fully investigated by means of epigraphic records.<sup>21</sup> The social stratification of lay Buddhists was investigated.<sup>22</sup>

A goddess was pictured on the coins of King Kaniska and King Huviska under the name of Nana or the Greek name Nanaia. It has been found that the worship of the Goddess Nanaia enjoyed popularity in Haira in Mesopotamia under the Parthian Dynasty.<sup>23</sup> Maga Brāhmaṇas or Gandhāra Brāhmaṇas, who practiced incest and endogamy, are mentioned in the religious literature of the Kushan period. They seem to have been influenced by Zoroastrianism.<sup>24</sup>

Tamils were very active even in early days. It is likely that they arrived even in the island of Java.<sup>25</sup>

The daily life of Indians underwent a considerable change in this period. For example, grape-wine was introduced from Western countries. Grapes were not found and did not grow in India before the Christian era or in the first century. However, grapes and their wines were already popular in Indian life in the fourth century A.D.<sup>26</sup>

One phenomenon quite unique in this period is that Christianity was conveyed to Malabar in South India by St. Thomas probably in 52 A.D. Since then the ancient Syrian Church has been existing in that district.<sup>27</sup>

15.B. The Gupta and Post-Gupta Periods

India came to be unified by king Candragupta who founded the Gupta dynasty (320–c. 500 A.D.).<sup>1</sup> In this dynasty a centralized state and the hierarchical system of the society were firmly established in the spirit of Brahmanism, for Brahmanistic revival was conspicuous in every aspect of the society.<sup>2</sup> Around 400–500 A.D. caste, vocation and property were inherited according to the regulations of dharma-sāstra.<sup>3</sup> Kautilya's Arthaśāstra, the Mānavadharmasāstra and the Yājñavalkya-smṛti were compiled around this period.<sup>4</sup> The Bṛhaspatismṛti, which is very precise and detailed in regulations, was composed around the 6–7th century A.D.<sup>5</sup>

The social basis of the Gupta Dynasty can be investigated by means of epigraphy and the use of historical records.<sup>6</sup> Fragments showing the political thought of Mahāyāna Buddhism in the scriptures were collected and analyzed.<sup>7</sup> Critical studies in the Gupta period were made by Japanese scholars.

Several Chinese pilgrims entered Gandhāra after the Kuṣāna dynasty, and left travel records.<sup>8</sup> Tao-an (314–385 A.D.) left a topographical record of Western countries including India. This work was lost; only its fragments exist.<sup>9</sup> The Fo-kuo-chi<sup>10</sup> or Records of the Buddhist Kingdom, were critically studied and annotated. This Chinese work is the record of the pilgrimage of Fa-hsien (ca. A.D. 339–420) through India. Fa-hsien started from Ch'ang-an, which was then the capital of northern China, for India in A.D. 399, when he was sixty-one years of age. He crossed central Asia and entered northern India in A.D. 402, staying at Pāṭaliputra and Tāmaliṭṭi. He reached Ceylon in A.D. 410. When he returned to China, he wrote his record in A.D. 412, moved to Nanking in 413, completed his record in 414, revised it in 416, and died in 420.

Candragupta II of the Gupta Dynasty was the ruling monarch in India during Fa-hsien's stay (A.D. 402–410); and this dynasty is said to have adopted Sanskrit as the official language for the first time in India. However, people continued to use Prakrit in conversation, as former generations had done. Consequently, the proper names of towns, persons, etc. may be presumed to have been pronounced either in Sanskrit or Prakrit. From this fact, many other conclusions can be reached regarding early pronunciations. Fa-hsien visited various places and collected anecdotes and other interesting stories about the towns he visited and the Buddhist life there. He recorded them in his record as faithfully as possible, using Chinese characters to transliterate Sanskrit and Prakrit words. By comparing his Chinese characters with Sanskrit and Prakrit, the exact pronunciation of Chinese characters in those days can be determined. It is assumed that such pronunciations prevailed in northern China in the period during or before A.D. 402–410. Ui collected all the Chinese characters used by Fa-hsien and made their exact sounds clear.<sup>11</sup>

After the death of Kumāragupta I, there occurred a feud between Skandagupta and Purugupta, two brothers with different mothers, and the whole dominion of the Gupta dynasty was divided into two, the one being inherited by the lineage—Skandagupta—Kumāragupta II—Budhagupta—Bhānugupta, the other being inherited by Purugupta—Narasimhagupta—Kumāragupta III.<sup>12</sup>

There have been found some copper plates referring to the sale of land in Bengal of the fifth and sixth centuries.<sup>13</sup>

Some dramas of Kālidāsa may be useful to historians of culture, for they provide some materials referring to the society of that time.<sup>14</sup>

The number of the hitherto discovered inscriptions may be an index of the influence and prestige of the Buddhist orders in the society of that time.<sup>15</sup> Not a single Mahāyāna inscription has yet been found with regard to the Kuṣāṇa period; among the Gupta inscriptions, we have found at least six Mahāyāna inscriptions. The Buddhist order at Sārnāth in the Gupta period seems to have been predominantly the Mahāsaṅghikas, according to the evidence by inscriptions.<sup>16</sup> Buddhist statues in China and Japan were chiefly influenced by the Gupta style.<sup>17</sup>

After the Gupta dynasty, the Hun chieftains Toramāṇa (about 500 A.D.) and Mihirakula (about 515 A.D.) invaded Northern India, and murdered thousands of people, taking no pity even on women and children. It is likely that there were two Toramāṇas.<sup>18</sup> The persecution of Buddhism by Mihirakula (or Mihiragula), the king of Ephthalites, is reflected in the Lotus Face Sūtra Rengemenkyō (蓮華面經); and the allusions of King Rengemen (Lotus-Face) to Mihiragula have been investigated.<sup>19</sup> Anyhow, the Hūṇas and the Ephtals should be distinguished from each others.<sup>20</sup>

Japanese studies of the post-Gupta period are meagre, but several items may be noted. The lives of sixty-one Chinese monks who went to India were set forth in the Biography of Eminent Buddhist Pilgrims of the Great Tang. This work was formerly introduced by Beal, and the entire text was translated by Chavannes. Adachi critically edited and translated it into Japanese, adding critical notes and improved western studies.<sup>22</sup>

In the post-Gupta period Buddhist influence was likewise still noticeable in the courts of kings. King Harṣa<sup>23</sup>, who unified most of Northern India, composed a well-known drama “Nāgānanda”,<sup>24</sup> in which the Buddhist ideal of sacrificing oneself is extolled. King Harṣa, being a devout Buddhist, adored Guṇaprabha as his spiritual teacher.<sup>25</sup> The travel record<sup>26</sup> of Hsüan-tsang<sup>27</sup> is, so to speak, a treasure-store of information about India under the reign of King Harṣa. Hsüan-tsang refers to cave temples in Marāṭha and Andhra, but it is not likely that he visited Ajaṅṭā.<sup>28</sup> Cīnabhukti, mentioned in Hsüan-tsang’s record, has been identified.<sup>29</sup>

A record of the Buddhist religion by I-tsing, a Chinese pilgrim, also conveys ample information of the India of the 7th century.<sup>30</sup> The historical situation of that time is represented in a historical drama entitled Kaumudī-Mahotsava.<sup>31</sup> Further studies which ought to be mentioned would include an archaeological survey of the cave in Udayagiri.<sup>32</sup>

Commercial intercourse between India and foreign countries was active in this period. In the Itinerary Book (道里記) by Kia Tan (賈耽) toward the end of the eighth century we find an interesting passage concerning the direct sailing route between China and the Arab

16.A. Introduction

Mahāyāna literally means “the Great Vehicle”.<sup>2</sup> It is a developed form of Buddhism. The word “great” was supposed to mean (1) greater, (2) more numerous and (3) superior. That is, (1) it is a “greater” teaching than that of Conservative Buddhism, which was called Hīnayāna, derogatory appellation by Mahāyānists. (2) It claimed to deliver more people from sufferings, than could be expected in old-style Conservative Buddhism. Therefore, (3) the former is superior to the latter.<sup>3</sup>

[Japanese studies] In the past the examination of Mahāyāna was confined mainly to Chinese and Japanese in fear that an inquiry into its origins would produce difficulties and even upset traditional doctrines of the Mahāyāna schools. The origin of Mahāyāna was left untouched due to the huge scope and complexities involved. However, the study of Mahāyāna has naturally become a favored subject for Japanese scholarship. A pioneer work in this field was Eun Maeda, Daijō Bukkyō-shi ron (大乘仏教史論 A discourse on the history of Mahāyāna Buddhism). Tokyo, Bunmeidō, April 1903; although he did not read Sanskrit. Some good outlines of Mahāyāna were published after World War II. As outlines of Mahāyāna the following works are important: Benkyō Shūo: Kyōten; S. Miyamoto: Seiritsu; Ohno:

The former section consists of two chapters: the first investigates the rise of Mahāyāna by tracing elements from the Āgamas, Abhidharma, Avadānas and to the Prajñā-pāramitā and Kegon sūtras; while the second elucidates the people connected with Mahāyāna sūtras and the background of the age of the Mahāyāna in examining the basis for Mahāyāna thought. The latter section gives a conspectus on the development of Sanskrit Buddhist texts of Mahāyāna. cf. J. W. de Jong in T'oung Pao, vol. 42, Nos. 3–4, 1953, pp. 345–347. R. of considerable importance.<sup>5</sup> Mahāyāna orders seem to have existed separately, apart from those of Conservative Buddhism.<sup>6</sup>

The Mahāyāna<sup>7</sup> order came into existence in the 2nd century A. D. in Northwestern India which stretches up to Mathurā, and then it spread in other areas.<sup>8</sup>

The śiṣyagana ('Congregation of Disciples') mentioned in the Ratnagotravibhāga etc. seems to have been an order aimed at altruistic activities.<sup>9</sup>

The Mahāyāna sūtras preferred the form of the Twelve Aṅgas to that of the Nine Aṅgas. In this connection some Mahāyāna sūtras owe it to the Mahīśāsakas.<sup>10</sup>

The propounders of Mahāyāna seem to have been homeless ascetics who did not belong to orthodox saṅghas.<sup>11</sup>

Probably they developed out of groups of religious people who had stūpas as the bases for their activities. They developed into the orders of Bodhisattvas, which consisted of clergy and laity.<sup>12</sup> Their leaders were preachers and reciters of the scriptures (dharmabhāṅakas),<sup>13</sup> and those who practised meditation.<sup>14</sup> Although some Mahāyānists recognized the merits of the worship of stūpas and the practice was adopted by them,<sup>15</sup> early Mahāyāna order concentrated on the recitation of scriptures<sup>16</sup> and did not stress building temples and stūpas<sup>17</sup> as in Conservative Buddhism. That is why there are few references to Mahāyāna in the inscriptions of the Kuṣāṇa period,<sup>18</sup> which are mostly records of establishing temples. This way of approach was efficient in making headway to spread the religion among common people, and for that purpose there was a need of glorification of Buddhas and of endowing magical character to the religion to cope with reviving Hinduism.<sup>19</sup>

Mr. Masao Shizutani, basing himself chiefly on epigraphical records and the dates of translation of Chinese versions, has made a proposal to make a distinction between proto-Mahāyāna,<sup>20</sup> which did not claim the appellation of "Mahāyāna", and early Mahāyāna. According to him, their dates are as follows:<sup>21</sup>

Proto-Mahāyāna in its incipient stage:	100—1 B. C.
Proto-Mahāyāna in its developed stage:	1—100 A. D.
Early Mahāyāna in its incipient stage:	50—100 A. D.
Early Mahāyāna in its developed stage:	100—250 A. D.

It is likely that the first scripture which used the term "Mahāyāna" is the Aṣṭasāhasrikā.<sup>22</sup>

The origin of the Bodhisattva doctrine, to which Mahāyāna owes its existence, can be traced to pre-Mahāyāna Buddhist literature.<sup>23</sup> The transition can be traced in the literature of Conservative Buddhism, and Mahāyāna ideas were formed already in Hīnayāna.<sup>24</sup> Mahāyāna Buddhism was not an independent school completely different from Conservative Buddhism.

In Mahāyāna treatises we find many traces of Pali texts.<sup>25</sup> Virtues emphasized by Hīnayāna were inherited by Mahāyāna, but the virtue of benevolence (maitri) and compassion (karuṇā) was regarded as the central one by Mahāyānists.<sup>26</sup> One feature of Mahāyāna is to admit the existence of an immense number of Buddhas in ten directions in the present time, although this idea can be traced to some extent in the scriptures of early Buddhism.<sup>27</sup> The Buddha, transcending mundane existence, becomes incarnate, is born in this world to save suffering beings,<sup>28</sup> and, the existence of many Buddhas thus came to be supposed.

In early Buddhism there was only one Bodhisattva (singular)<sup>29</sup> who was regarded as the Śākyamuni in his previous existences. The bodhisattva idea was fused later into Jātaka stories.<sup>30</sup> Later, those persons who make a vow to save suffering beings were called Bodhisattvas<sup>31</sup>

<sup>31</sup> It is likely that the word bodhisattva was pronounced as bo-sat or bo-sa in the languages of Central

(plural). Based upon this concept the Way of Bodhisattvas originated.<sup>31</sup> A bodhisattva does not get into nirvāṇa, for he is always with suffering living beings to save them.<sup>32</sup> Salvation by Buddhas and Bodhisattvas was stressed.<sup>34</sup> So there were two ways of Buddhist practice, that is, Śrāvaka-mārga and Bodhisattva-mārga, the former expounding a Hinayanistic way of practice which existed before Mahāyāna, and the latter developing later into a central conception in the formation of Mahāyāna. There were some Bodhisattva bhikkhus.<sup>35</sup> It was indeed in the Avadāna literature that the foregoing Bodhisattva-mārga made its first appearance. In these Avadānas, every Bodhisattva appeared at first<sup>36</sup> as a remembrance of the historical Śākyamuni and naturally reflected the personal character of that personage. Later, however, these original features of a Bodhisattva were replaced by other qualifications, i. e., Vows (praṇidhāna) and Practice (bhāvanā).<sup>37</sup> These two qualifications—making Vows to devote himself to the salvation of living beings, and putting these vows into Practice to realize thereby the supreme ideal—came to be generally accepted as the essential characteristics of the Bodhisattva; Bodhisattvas put forth vows that are common to all bodhisattvas, as well as their own, individually unique vows.<sup>38</sup> The vows and practices of bodhisattvas increased with the lapse of time.<sup>39</sup>

Thus, it follows that the privilege of becoming a Bodhisattva was opened to all candidates for Enlightenment and the Bodhisattva ideal became accessible to every human being. Thus the Avadāna literature was the matrix of Mahāyāna sūtras.<sup>40</sup> In Mahāyāna bodhisattvas take over sufferings and afflictions of others to themselves,<sup>41</sup> this act being called “taking over sufferings on others’ behalf”,<sup>42</sup> and they transfer their own merits to others.<sup>43</sup>

At the same time there also arose a belief in the Sambhogakāya, an ever-present Buddha enjoying now the blissful reward for the services rendered in his Bodhisattva days in the past and preaching in his Buddha-land even at the present time.

Following this line of the development from the Bodhisattva to the Sambhogakāya Buddha, Mahāyāna sūtras<sup>44</sup> began their steady growth in the first century B. C. and they reached their fullest splendor by the seventh or eighth century A. D.<sup>45</sup>

Mahāyāna Sūtras are often called with the epithet Vaipulya (extensive and glorious).<sup>46</sup> They are masterpieces of literature which aimed at artistic efficiency.<sup>47</sup>

The first appearance of the Bodhisattva-idea must be placed between the beginning of the first century B. C. and the middle of the first century A. D., that is to say, after Bharhut sculptures and before the appearance of early Mahāyāna scriptures. The origin of Mahāyāna Buddhism must be placed in the time above mentioned or, roughly, immediately before or after Christ.<sup>48</sup> The priority given to the Bodhisattva-idea over that of Mahāyāna is in accordance to the evidence of archaeological findings; that all Bodhisattva statues have been found only in shrines of Conservative Buddhism, and none of the sites of Mahāyāna buildings around that time have been hithertofore found. The ideal of the Bodhisattva is noticed among the Jains also,<sup>49</sup> parallel to that of Buddhism. But in later days this became peculiarly Buddhistic. There were various kinds of Bodhisattvas, which were enumerated in Nāgārjuna's work.<sup>50</sup>

The coming into existence of Mahāyāna sūtras was a shocking event to the Buddhist circle.<sup>51</sup> Their authenticity was disputed.<sup>52</sup> Conservative Buddhists said that they were teachings by demons.<sup>53</sup>

With regard to the question when and where the bulky sūtras of Mahāyāna were produced,<sup>54</sup> the sūtras contain no information whatever. For this reason modern critical studies of the scriptures are prerequisite for finding an answer to the question.<sup>55</sup> The basic material for the critical studies of the sūtras of Mahāyāna Buddhism is their Sanskrit originals. Up to the present a fairly large number of these have been discovered<sup>56</sup> and some of them published.<sup>57</sup> Many of these can be compared with, and cross-referred to, Chinese translations.<sup>58</sup>

<sup>54</sup> A perspective of chronology of Mahāyāna sūtras was set forth by H. Nakamura (in Eng.) in the Bulletin of the Okurayama Institute, No. 2. This is a summary of Japanese studies on the problem, and it has been substantially included in this article. B. Shiiō (Kyōten, pp. 70 f.; p. 97 f.) believes that the Mahāyāna sūtras translated into Chinese by Lokakṣema were composed around 50–150 A. D.

<sup>55</sup> As for the period in which individual sūtras saw light, brief comments are given in the introduction to the volumes of Japanese Version or Tripitaka (Kokuyaku-Issaikyō 國訳一切經) as well as in the Bussho-Kaisetsu-Daijiten (仏書解説大辞典 Explanatory Dictionary of Buddhist Books). In the following important results of studies will be mentioned (mostly in Japanese) chiefly with reference to the chronological order of the sacred books.

Among Chinese translators, Kumārajīva,<sup>59</sup> Paramārtha and Hsuan-tsang were probably most important.

Buddhist Sanskrit contains special features of its own.<sup>60</sup> In the beginning, various Buddhist sūtras appeared in Prakrit<sup>61</sup> or in the languages of Central Asia. But about the time when Buddhism was studied at Nālandā University, in the sixth century, they had been rewritten in Sanskrit, though there remain in these Sanskrit versions traces of Prakrit colloquialism.<sup>62</sup> In my view this change to Sanskrit from Prakrit was caused by the founding of the Gupta

<sup>59</sup> Kumārajīva was discussed by Zenryū Tsukamoto in Yūki Comm. Vol. pp. 359-378 and in Higata Comm. Vol. pp. 353-370; by Hirofumi Toda, IBK. vol. 15, No. 2, March 1967, 202-211. Kumārajīva's Chinese version reflects the idea of Buddha-Nature, because he had it in mind. (Hirofumi Toda in IBK. vol. 11, No. 2, March 1963, pp. 172-173.) Kumārajīva's versions occasionally indicate this-worldly tendency and some other features. It is likely that he distorted the original sentences in translation according to his own thought. (H. Nakamura in Kanakura Comm. Vol.) Dialogues between Kumārajīva and 慧遠 (鳩摩羅什仏法師大義) were studied by H. Ui (Daijō Butten etc. pp. 831-927.)

This problem was fully discussed by Hideo Kimura, Bukkyōgaku-Kenkyū, No. 7, 1952, pp. 1-37. In Buddhist Sanskrit cases of nouns and adjectives are occasionally used in a different way from classical Sanskrit. Cases are mentioned and discussed by Yasuaki Nara in Gurupūjāñjali, Bulletin of the Philological Society of Calcutta, vol. 2, Department of Comparative Philology, 1961, pp. 5-11. (in Engl.) Dynasty in 320 A. D., which adopted Sanskrit as the official language. Nearly all the inscriptions on pre-Gupta monuments and tablets are in Prakrit, but almost all similar inscriptions made after the founding of that dynasty and later are written in Sanskrit. It is very probable that Buddhist believers adapted themselves to the political trend of those early times.<sup>63</sup>

Within a few decades a great number of Buddhist Sanskrit manuscripts were discovered in Gilgit,<sup>64</sup> Central Asia<sup>65</sup> etc.<sup>66</sup> Scholars have made great contributions by utilizing them.<sup>67</sup> Texts written in the languages of Central Asia also are very helpful for the study of Indian Buddhism.<sup>68</sup>

Almost at the same time as Mahāyāna originated, statues of Buddhas and Bodhisattvas came into existence. It is likely that the prototype of Buddhist statues existed prior to those of Gandhāra and those of Mathurā, and that Buddhist statues developed from the prototype.<sup>69</sup>

All evidences seem to indicate that the character of Buddhism which prevailed at the time of the "Graeco-Buddhist" art of Gandhāra was Hinayānistic and that any Mahāyānistic expression cannot be found in votive inscriptions as well as sculptural art in the earlier epoch at least. The Sarvāstivādin sect was predominant in this area at the time when the first Buddha image was made.<sup>70</sup>

The relationship of Mahāyāna Sūtras with Buddhist arts<sup>71</sup> has been still controversial.

Gandhāra sculpture<sup>72</sup> began towards the end of the first century B. C. The details of the assumption is as follows:

It is said that the Greek influence<sup>73</sup> in domestic articles such as toilet trays etc., was noticeable in the 1st century B. C. but on the statuary side it is observable in the Scytho-Parthian Period between 90 B. C. and 60 A. D., preferably towards the end of B. C. age, and in the first century A. D. we find a plastic art fully influenced and developed on Hellenistic lines and proportions. Simultaneously we also find in stucco a Bodhisattva head and beads, a prototype of Gandhāra Buddha which however had not finally emerged as yet.<sup>74</sup>

During the Greek rule up to 90 B. C. the Gandhāra sculpture had not emerged. The Kuṣāṇas<sup>75</sup> were favorably inclined towards Mahāyāna. Under their patronage the Buddhist pantheon was so much expanded as to depict Greek gods like Hermes, Dionysos, Zeus and Herakles etc. as Vajrapāṇi (Buddha's angel companion), perhaps in an attempt to show Buddha's superiority over them.

Although there is a theory that the art of Gandhāra contains hardly anything which can be considered as an expression of Mahāyāna,<sup>76</sup> a Buddha statue, from whose shoulders flames come out, was found in Gandhāra. This coincides with the descriptions in Mahāyāna-sūtras.<sup>77</sup>

The act of carving of a great Buddha statue at Bāmiyān<sup>78</sup> must be related to the elevated extolment of Buddha-worship. Buddhas were deified<sup>79</sup> and their figures were magnified owing to opulent imagination.<sup>80</sup>

There exist some works setting forth the rules for sculpturing the images of Buddhas. The Pratimālakṣaṇa<sup>81</sup> is one of them. The date of the archetype of this work may be pushed back to the Gupta period, but it cannot be placed much later than the 10th century A. D.

With regard to the region where the sūtras were produced or prevailed, we must take into consideration not only India but Central Asia.<sup>82</sup> Some manuscript copies of sūtras discovered in Central Asia are of very early date, those written on birch barks being of the periods between the first century B. C. and the following century.<sup>83</sup> And the Sanskrit copies produced in Central Asia,<sup>84</sup> are different in content from those discovered in Nepal. Quite a large number of manuscript copies of Chinese versions of sūtras have been excavated.<sup>85</sup> The Stein documents are a very precious find.<sup>86</sup> In Central Asia many Buddhist sūtras in the Tocharian language have also been discovered<sup>87</sup> as have been those in the Uigrian language.<sup>88</sup> But the texts in Khotanese found hithertofore are mostly sūtras, and philosophical texts are rather few. From these facts it is thinkable that the Buddhist order in Central Asia was of a fairly large size.<sup>89</sup> Buddhism finally reached China.<sup>90</sup>

Mahāyāna spread to Southern countries also, such as Ceylon<sup>91</sup> and the peninsula of Indo-China.<sup>92</sup> In the Christian East also Buddhist influence was noticeable.<sup>93</sup>

16.B. Earlier Sūtras

16.B.i. Earlier and Wisdom Sūtras<sup>1</sup>

The scheme of the earliest Mahāyāna sūtras was to mention Jetavana or Veḷuvana as the gathering place for sermons by the Buddha, and to mention 1250 bhikkhus alone; they did not mention bodhisattvas. This scheme was inherited from that of the sūtras of Early Buddhism. Among the scriptures translated into Chinese by Ch'ih-ch'ien (支謙), the Vajracchedikā-parajñāpāramitā-sūtra, and next to it, the older version of the Kāśyapaparivarta (遺日摩尼寶經, tr. by Lokakṣema 支婁迦讖) and the Pratyutpannabuddha-sammukhāvasthita-samādhi-sūtra (般舟三昧經),<sup>2</sup> preserve this scheme.<sup>3</sup>

Of other Mahāyāna sūtras, the earliest that came into being was Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras.<sup>4</sup> The Mahāyāna Buddhist texts, which deal with the "Perfection of Wisdom," constitute the philosophical basis of later Buddhist thought. They are, however, regarded as scriptures rather than philosophical tracts by their adherents.

The Pūrvaśailas, a sect of Hīnayāna, is said to have possessed the Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras edited in Prakrit.<sup>5</sup> Japanese scholars are apt to say that the Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras first came into existence in South India, especially in Andhra, among the Mahāsaṅghikas.<sup>6</sup> Against this, E. Lamotte asserts that Mahāyāna came into existence in north-western and central India.<sup>7</sup>

The origin of the Heart Sūtra and the Diamond Sūtra should be placed between 150–200 A. D.<sup>8</sup>

The Vajracchedikā-prajñāpāramitā-sūtra<sup>9</sup> (“Diamond-Cutter Sūtra”) is the 9th section of the tremendously long text entitled the Mahā-prajñāpāramitāsūtra. It came into existence especially early. Its antiquity is inferred from the fact that its contents are sermons which were exclusively delivered to only 1250 monks at Jetavana.<sup>10</sup> There are copies of the original Kumārajīva's Chinese translation of the Vajracchedikā-prajñāpāramitāsūtra<sup>15</sup> was transcribed with Brāhmī characters in Khotanese. A manuscript was found at Tun-huang by Stein.<sup>16</sup> The pronunciation of each Chinese character has been made out<sup>17</sup> and the results of study are very helpful for Chinese linguistics and also for the recognition of Sanskrit original terms from Chinese transcriptions.

The Ārya-prajñāpāramitā-ratna-guṇa-saṃcaya-gāthā<sup>25</sup> is a scripture which has caused attention by scholars. It is said by some scholars that this scripture is a summary based upon the Aṣṭasāhasrikā. The Prajñāpāramitā-ratna-guṇa-saṃcaya-gāthā seems to be the only known text among the Prajñāpāramitā literature that is known in the so-called Buddhist Sanskrit at its earliest stage. There is an opinion that the first two chapters of the Ratna-guṇa-saṃcaya-gāthā represent the initial stage of the Prajñāpāramitā thought, and may well go back to 100 B. C.<sup>26</sup>

According to an opinion formed as the result of studies made in recent years, the Larger Ones among these (大品)<sup>27</sup> were the originals and the Smaller Ones (小品) their abridgements.<sup>28</sup> Many scholars,<sup>29</sup> however, are of the opinion that the sūtras of the Larger Ones group came out of those of the preceding Smaller Ones group (e. g., the Aṣṭasāhasrikā) and these were the progenitors of various sūtras of the first large section (初会) group (e. g. Śatasāhasrikā).<sup>30</sup> It is probable that in their primitive form the sūtras contained only the portion ending in the vyākaraṇa (授記) of the first chapter of the Smaller Prajñāpāramitās (小品般若) supplemented with the portion up to the 25th chapter (阿闍佉国品) and that it was from this that the sūtra in its present form was produced.<sup>31</sup>

There are several Chinese versions of the Smaller Prajñāpāramitāsūtras (小品般若).<sup>32</sup> The Larger Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras (大品般若) have been discovered in Central Asia too, which fact proves the missionary activity that was once carried on in this region.<sup>33</sup> Many manuscript copies of the Vajracchedikā and the Mahāprajñāpāramitā-sūtras (大般若經) have also been discovered in this region.<sup>34</sup>

It seems that the Prajñāpāramitā-naya-śatapañcāśatikā (理趣經)<sup>35</sup> came into existence a little later than the foregoing sections of this sūtra.<sup>36</sup> It has two kinds: unabridged and abridged. The original of the seven-volume version of this sūtra was already in existence as early as the time of the Tang Dynasty (618–906).<sup>37</sup>

The prototype of the Prajñāpāramitā-śatapañcāśatikā was called 'Sarvabuddhasamayoga', and the existing smaller version originated prior to the existing larger version.<sup>38</sup>

It is very probable that an Acārya called Kukurāja played some role in the completion of the Mūla-kalpa, but not probable that he participated in the completion of the Prajñāpāramitā-naya-śatapañcāśatikā.<sup>39</sup>

The Chinese version of this text was edited with its translations into classical Japanese and its free modern interpretation in present-day Japanese by Yukio Hatta in his Rishukyō no Gendai Iyaku to Mikkyō Kyōri (A translation of the Adhyardhaśatikā into modern Japanese and the teachings of Esoteric Buddhism 理趣經の現代意識と密教教理), Wakayama-ken, Kōyasan Shuppansha, Oct. 1965, 16+232+19 pp. The esoteric teachings of the verses of this sūtra were explained by Jitsudō Nagasawa in Chizan Gakuhō, Nov. 1964, pp. 27–43. <sup>38</sup> The prototype of the Rishukyō was conjectured by Shūyū Kanaoka, Bukkyō Shigaku, Vol. 12, No. 4, Oct 1966, 1–12 (185–196). Various versions of the Prajñāpāramitā-naya śatapañcāśatikā-sūtra were compared by Yukio Hatta, IBK. vol. 16, No. 1, Dec. 1967, 205–209.

On the Prajñāpāramitā-naya-śatapañcāśatikā there are four commentaries in Tibetan and one in Chinese. One Tibetan commentary is by Jñānamitra.<sup>40</sup> Jñānamitra who lived before Den kar ma composed a commentary on the Prajñāpāramitā-naya-śatapañcāśatikā.<sup>41</sup>

In the course of the production of the Mahāprajñāpāramitāsūtra (大般若經) monks of the Dharmaguptakas (法藏部) were concerned with it in some way, either directly or indirectly.<sup>42</sup> These separate sūtras were put together, and finally the tremendously big text of the Mahā-prajñāpāramitā-sūtra was compiled. It was translated into Chinese by Hsuan-tsang in 600 volumes in Chinese binding.<sup>43</sup> Some scholars hold the opinion that the Prajñāpāramitāsūtras were already in existence in primitive form in the second century B. C.<sup>44</sup> Generally, however, it is considered that the original pattern of the Smaller Prajñāpāramitāsūtras was produced about 50 A. D. and was enlarged later<sup>45</sup> or that it saw light in North-West India in the first-second centuries A. D.<sup>46</sup> At any rate the sūtras contain a statement that the primitive original first came into existence in South India, then spread to West India and finally to North India. Accordingly, one is justified in concluding that ultimately the sūtras were rapidly expanded in the Kuṣāṇa Empire.

The "Heart Sūtra" (Prajñā-pāramitā-hṛdaya-sūtra),<sup>47</sup> the shortest text among those belonging to this group, is said to teach the "Heart" of the Perfect Wisdom. Ancient manuscripts of this text in the ancient palm leaves have been preserved since the year 609 A. D. in the monastery of Hōryūji in Japan.<sup>48</sup> At the end of this sūtra there is a magical formula, which claims to be the "mantra which alleviates all pain." There are also fragments of the Pra- jñāpāramitāhrdayasūtra different from any other Chinese version. They were discovered at Tung-huang (燉煌).<sup>49</sup> These have been included in the Taisho edition which is a complete collection of the Buddhist scriptures (Tripiṭaka).

Discussions on this sūtra by Seishin Katō in Shūkyō Kenkyū, Nr. 130, June 1952, pp. 85-93.

<sup>48</sup> The Sanskrit manuscript of the Heart Sūtra preserved by the Hōryūji Temple has been shifted to Tokyo, and has been preserved at the Hōryūji Treasure House of the National Museum, Ueno Park, Tokyo.

In Tung-huang more than seventy manuscripts of Tibetan versions of the Heart Sūtra were unearthed. The Tibetan version of the Greater Version corresponds as a whole to that in the Tibetan Tripiṭaka, whereas that of the Smaller Version considerably differs from that in the Tibetan Tripiṭaka.<sup>50</sup>

As for the Jen-wang-hou-kouo-pan-jo-po-lo-mi-ching (Prajñāpāramitāsūtra on a benevolent King who Protects his country, 仁王般若波羅蜜經)<sup>51</sup> an opinion is advanced that it was produced in China by collecting materials from various sources,<sup>52</sup> probably between 426–512.<sup>53</sup> Another opinion has it that it was originally produced in India about 300 A. D.<sup>54</sup> It may be added that the Tibetan Tripiṭaka contains the Minor Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras consisting of the Prajñāpāramitā-sūryagarbha (日藏般若), Prajñāpāramitā-candragarbha (月藏般若), Prajñāpāramitā-samantabhadra (普賢般若), Prajñāpāramitā-vajrapāṇi (金剛手般若) and Prajñāpāramitā-vajraketu (金剛幢般若). But neither Sanskrit original nor Chinese translation of them exists.<sup>55</sup>

16.B.ii. Other Philosophical Sūtras

Important ideas of Buddhism were topics of some sūtras. In the Nairātmyapariṣcchā<sup>1</sup>, which was spuriously ascribed to Aśvaghōṣa,<sup>2</sup> to secure a stamp of authority for this work, the teaching of Non-Self is explained to a heretic. In the “Non Possession Bodhisattva Sūtra”,<sup>3</sup> which must have been composed earlier than 200 A. D., the Buddha teaches the Bodhisattva, who is called “Non-possession” and others.

In the “Buddha Word Sūtra,”<sup>4</sup> it is claimed that negative expressions are the word of Buddha. In the Mañjuśrī-vikāra-sūtra<sup>5</sup> Mañjuśrī sets forth the teachings of Voidness.

<sup>1</sup> There are two Chinese versions: 外道問聖大乘法無我義經. Taisho, No. 846. Translated into Chinese by Dharmadeva. This was translated into Japanese by Hōkei Idzumi in KIK., Kyōshūbu, vol. 15. 尼乾子問無我義經 (Taisho, No. 1643). Translated into Chinese by 日称 etc. This was translated into Japanese by Gishō Nakano in KIK., Ronshūbu, vol. 2. The Sanskrit text was found and edited by S. Lévi in JA., t. 213, 1928, p. 207 ff. 16.B.iii. Philosophical Thought

This ultimate truth<sup>8</sup> is called "Voidness" (Emptiness śūnyatā)<sup>9</sup> which was expressed by other terms also.<sup>10</sup> "Suchness" (tathatā) is one of them.<sup>11</sup> Tathatā<sup>12</sup> was the aim of the practice of Transcendental Wisdom.<sup>13</sup>

The ultimate value in Mahāyāna was expressed with the terms dharmatā, dharmadhātu, dharmakāya and buddhadhātu,<sup>14</sup> which are synonyms of Voidness. But Voidness itself is ineffable.<sup>15</sup> Out of the contemplation of Voidness Great Compassion comes out.<sup>16</sup>

The thought of Voidness can be taught in accordance with the mental ability of hearers.<sup>17</sup> Expediency (upāya) in Wisdom Sūtras is the link between Voidness and Compassion.<sup>18</sup> When one thing is beneficial to living beings in one respect, it is called 'good'. When not, 'bad'. Relativity of good and bad is expressed in the Diamond Sūtra.<sup>19</sup> The Heart Sūtra denies the existence of good or evil in the absolute sense of the word.<sup>20</sup>

What the Wisdom sūtras encourage is the attitude of non-attachment.<sup>21</sup> The term 'non-attachment' (Mushojū 無所住) in the Vajracchedikā-sūtra was explained away as a positive concept in Chinese and Japanese Vajrayāna.<sup>22</sup>

The Wisdom Literature is of practical significance. Those who desire to diminish their personal worries go to these sūtras to practise the disciplined contemplation of spiritual truths.

The Wisdom Sūtras adopted the system of the "Six Perfections" (pāramitās), i. e., Liberality, Morality,<sup>23</sup> Forbearance,<sup>24</sup> Resolution, Contemplation and Wisdom,<sup>25</sup> all of them being already mentioned in the Mahāvastu.<sup>26</sup>

Especially the attitude of passivity or receptivity (kṣānti) was stressed by Buddhism, and it has become a feature conspicuous of Buddhists in many countries.<sup>27</sup>

These sūtras aim at the practice of their own.<sup>28</sup> The traditional concepts of nirvāṇa and transmigration were reinterpreted. The goal of salvation is no longer nirvāṇa, but understanding of the reality of transmigration as the void (śūnyatā).

But these sūtras did not overlook the necessity of gradual development of the mind of the aspirant. They set forth the Ten Stages (bhūmi)<sup>29</sup> for the aspirant, which were already mentioned in the Mahāvastu.<sup>30</sup>

Mahāyāna sūtras, beginning with these, propounded the theory of Purity of Mind by Origin (心性本淨). The origin of this theory can be noticed in early Buddhism<sup>31</sup> and also especially in the Śāriputra-abhidharma-prakaraṇa.<sup>32</sup>

It has been asserted that the most remarkable characteristic of Mahāyāna is its view that the mind is originally pure.<sup>33</sup> The Original Purity of Mind (cittasya prakṛtiprabhāsvaratā) is one of the central themes of Wisdom Sūtras and other Mahāyāna works.<sup>34</sup> Bodhicitta makes one not only transcend the mundane world of transmigration but also return to it again.<sup>35</sup> Pure mind, which is the basis of compassion, has been the fundamental principle of Buddhist ethics.<sup>36</sup> This theory was inherited by later and esoteric Buddhism.<sup>37</sup> It gave rise to the conception of Enlighten-mind.<sup>38</sup> Wisdom Sūtras paved a way to the interpretation of it by Esoteric Buddhists in later days.<sup>39</sup> Dharmarakṣa (233–310 A. D.) translated into Chinese a number of sūtras propounding the theory of Original Purity of Mind.<sup>40</sup>

The followers of these scriptures alleged that the theory of "Voidness" is not nihilism, but it gives the basis to practice.<sup>41</sup> In these sūtras the concept of the Ten Steps by which applicants for Enlightenment should pass is set forth.<sup>42</sup>

16.C. Meditation Sūtras

Among the sects of Conservative Buddhism<sup>1</sup> there were Yogācāras, i. e. "Those who practise meditation". They did not engage in discussions, but in meditation. The Meditation Sūtras of Mahāyāna seem to have originated from among them.<sup>2</sup>

Meditation<sup>3</sup> was esteemed in Conservative Buddhism. In an earlier sūtra<sup>4</sup> the Buddha teaches a follower the meditation (samādhi) called "Endowed with Splendor".<sup>5</sup> The supposition of many Buddhas by Mahāyānist was for meditation. By meditating on various Buddhas and their pure lands they could calm their mind, eliminate mental defilements and attain the state of Voidness.<sup>6</sup> Meditation was regarded as endowed with some miraculous power. For example, the Hastikakṣyā-sūtra<sup>7</sup> says that one who observes this sūtra becomes as powerful as an elephant.

The Yogācārabhūmi-sūtra,<sup>8</sup> whose Sanskrit text is lost, sets forth the stages of meditation for yogins. This is virtually an anthology of passages relevant to meditation composed by Saṅgharakṣa. The Yogācārabhūmisūtra (修行道地經) translated by Dharmarakṣa into Chinese, first came into existence in the form of one volume of 7 chapters, grew into a sūtra of 27 chapters and then the 28th chapter (弟子三品修行品 etc.) and other chapters being added, came to assume the present form of 7 volumes of 30 chapters in the Chinese version. The Yogācārabhūmisūtra of 27 chapters and that of 30 chapters are of later production than the original of the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka.<sup>9</sup> That is to say that the last three chapters were translated into Chinese separately and were added to the sūtra later.<sup>10</sup>

"The Sūtra on the Secret Teaching of Meditation", (禪秘要法經)<sup>11</sup> is a collection of four separate sections. "The Meditation Concentration Sūtra" (坐禪三昧經)<sup>12</sup> which presupposes the above-mentioned sūtra, sets forth a system of the practice of the Fivefold meditation which greatly influenced Master Tien-tai of China in his works (次第禪門 etc.)<sup>13</sup> “An Epitome of Meditation” (思惟略要法)<sup>14</sup> sets forth ten kinds of meditation, among which the Amitāyurbuddhadhyāna meditation, the tattva meditation and the Saddharmapuṇḍarika meditation were very influential in later days. The Dharmatara-dhyāna-sūtra<sup>15</sup> gives a systematical explanation of the meditation of Dharmatara and Buddhasena. It became very important in Zen Buddhism, and also harbingers the maṇḍalas of Vajrayāna.

The Pratyutpanna-buddha-saṃmukhāvasthitasamādhi-sūtra<sup>16</sup> (般舟三昧經) is a translation done by Lokakṣema of the later Han Dynasty. This text teaches that one can see in this samādhi all the Buddhas in the ten directions, and finds oneself in their presence. This must be one of the earliest Mahāyāna sūtras. There is a conjecture that the Pratyutpanna-samādhi-sūtra might possibly have been a textbook of Buddhist laymen in the early Mahāyānistic period.<sup>17</sup> It was well-known among Chinese and Japanese Buddhists for the fact that it refers to the worship of Amitābha Buddha. The fact that the meeting was simple, having been attended by 500 bhiksus and 500 bodhisattvas, shows that the sūtra was a product of the early days of Mahāyāna Buddhism.<sup>18</sup> The one-volume recension of the Pratyutpanna Buddha-saṃmukhāvasthita-sūtra seems to have been composed before the Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras or in the area where the prajñā-pāramitā thought was not preached. The three-volume recension was influenced by the thought.<sup>19</sup> Pratyutpanna-samādhi unmistakably influenced Pure Land Buddhism.<sup>20</sup>

This sūtra is said to be younger than the Smaller Prajñāpāramitā-sūtra (小品般若) but older than the larger Prajñāpāramitā-sūtra (大品般若).<sup>21</sup> This sūtra came finally to be included in the larger collection of the Mahāsaṃnipāta-sūtra,<sup>22</sup> as the Bhadrapāla section.<sup>23</sup> The Sanskrit text of the Bhadrapāla-sūtra seems to be older than the original of the Chinese version of it included in the Mahāsaṃnipāta-sūtra.<sup>24</sup>

The Kuan-fu-san-mei-hai-ching-sūtra (觀仏三昧海經), resembling the Pratyutpanna-samādhi-sūtra in some respects, has much in common with the Amitāyurdhyāna-sūtra with regard to the structure and contents of the sūtras; the main difference being that, whereas the former taught meditation on Buddhas in general, the latter enjoins the meditation on Amitābha alone.<sup>25</sup>

The Samādhirāja or the Samādhirāja-candrapradīpa-sūtra<sup>26</sup> represents a dialogue between

Zen Buddhism originated out of such a religious atmosphere.<sup>35</sup> Although historical records of transmission of Zen in India (e. g. 付法藏因緣伝) are not trustworthy,<sup>36</sup> it is certain that Bodhidharma came from India to China early in the 6th century.<sup>37</sup> The Northern Zen sect advocated "gradual practice" resorting to the Lañkāvatāra-sūtra,<sup>38</sup> whereas the Southern Zen sect aimed at "immediate enlightenment".<sup>39</sup>

The Shao-shih-liu-mên-chi (小室六門集) is a collection of six works which were ascribed to Bodhidharma: five of the six are regarded as spurious. Of the works ascribed to Bodhidharma found in Tun-huang the Chüeh-kuan-lun by Master Ta-mo (達摩和尚絕觀論)<sup>40</sup> was virtually written by Fa-jung (牛頭法融 594-657); the Wu-hsin-lun (無心論) is a sisterwork to the above, and not by Bodhidharma. the Ssü-hsing-kuan by Master Ta-mo (達摩大師四行論) was thought to be by Bodhidharma by D. T. Suzuki<sup>41</sup> (禪思想史研究), by Hui-k'o (慧可) by Ui<sup>42</sup> (禪宗史研究), but Sekiguchi says it was written after Fa-ts'ung (法聰 468-559).<sup>43</sup> The thought of Bodhidharma can be known, according to Sekiguchi, only from the "Two-fold Insight" (二入四行) and the "Treatise on Master Ta-mo" (達摩禪師論).<sup>44</sup>

16.D. Transmigration Sūtras

There are some sūtras describing the process of transmigration of living beings, such as 第一義法勝經,<sup>1</sup> 見正經.<sup>2</sup> In some sūtras (分別業報略經,<sup>3</sup> 五苦章句經<sup>4</sup>) sufferings of gods, men, beasts, ghosts (preta) and hellish beings in five spheres (gati) of transmigratory mundane existence are depicted, whereas in the Ṣaḍgati-kārikā<sup>5</sup> those of six kinds of living beings (the above-mentioned five and asuras, i. e. warlike demons) are depicted. In a sūtra (鬼問日連經)<sup>6</sup> Moggallāna replies to a preta (ghost) about the retribution of karmas. The Kṣudraka-sūtra<sup>7</sup> also describes retribution of karma like the preceding. In the Saddharma-smṛty-upasthāna-sūtra (正法念處經),<sup>8</sup> Buddhist cosmology is set forth on a large scale. Hells, ghosts (pretas), beasts and gods are depicted, and then the human body is meditated upon. Some psychological theories on mental functions (caitta) are in common with those in the Abhidharmāmṛta by Ghoṣaka.<sup>9</sup> This sūtra seems to have been composed in the second century A. D. Anyhow, it was composed in a period not remote from the Dharmasamuccaya.<sup>10</sup>

In the Chinese version<sup>11</sup> translated in 539 A. D., there is found a trace of the influence of the Kaśmirean Recension of the Rāmāyaṇa. As the different recensions came into being about the beginning of our era, this sūtra seems to be a later outcome.<sup>12</sup> The Dharmasamuccaya,<sup>13</sup> consisting mostly of gāthās, has a close connection to the Saddharma-smṛty-upasthāna-

In the period when these sūtras were composed the process of transmigration was explained with the theory of Dependent Origination. The first link (aṅga) of the formula, i. e., Nescience (avidyā), was discussed in detail in some sūtras.<sup>17</sup> The Śālistamba-sūtra<sup>18</sup> teaches the theory of Dependent Origination in Twelve Links by a comparison with the growth of a rice plant. There is a text of the Śālistamba-sūtra in the Mādhyamika setting. ## 16.E. Extollment of Mahāyāna and Worship of Bodhisattvas

In Mahāyāna, Buddhas came to be regarded as more superhuman and more divine than in Conservative Buddhism, although physical and spiritual features of Buddhas were retained.<sup>1</sup> A Buddha was termed as "the Omniscient One."<sup>2</sup> The Kusuma-saṅcaya-sūtra specially emphasizes the worship of Buddhas, and, in this respect, asserts a simplification of Buddhism, extolling faith in Buddhas.<sup>3</sup> In the Ratnajāli-pariṣṭchāsūtra<sup>4</sup> a boy called Ratnajāli extolls the Buddha and refers to Maitreya. In some sūtras blasphemy on the Buddha is admonished as the gravest sin.<sup>5</sup> The Great Compassion of the Buddha is extended to children. This theme is set forth in the "Five Hundred Children Sūtra".<sup>6</sup>

Already in Conservative Buddhism some people embraced the belief that there were many Buddhas in the present period.<sup>7</sup> This belief developed in Mahāyāna to a great extent. Invocation of the names of Buddhas was extolled.<sup>8</sup> Many Buddhas appear in Mahāyāna sūtras and it was enjoined to adore all these Buddhas in the equal manner, which is especially characteristic of the Sūtras Enumerating Buddha's Names.<sup>9</sup> They extoll many Buddhas equally. There exist about 21 sūtras in the Chinese Tripiṭaka which extol recitation of the names of many Buddhas.<sup>10</sup>

Repetition of names of Buddhas and Bodhisattvas is encouraged in the Nāmasaṃgiti.<sup>11</sup> Nāmasaṃgiti itself became a deity in Vajrayāna.<sup>12</sup>

One sūtra (八吉祥神呪經)<sup>13</sup> describes the Eight Buddhas and sets forth their invocations. In the Ratnacandra-pariprcchā-sūtra Śākyamuni teaches Ratnacandra, a son of Bimbisāra the worship of the Ten Buddhas located in their respective Pure Land in the ten directions.<sup>14</sup>

The Bhadrakalpa-samādhi-sūtra<sup>15</sup> extolls the Thousand Buddhas in the present age (Bhadrakalpa), and enjoins the practice of 84,000 Perfections (pāramitās). This text seems to have been composed in about 250 A. D. or 200–250 A. D. There are 11 sūtras<sup>16</sup> of more or less similar contents. One of them (千仏因縁經)<sup>17</sup> sets forth the Jātakas of the Thousand Buddhas.

Finally they went as far as to say in a sūtra (諸法勇王經),<sup>18</sup> that homeless bodhisattvas are much superior<sup>19</sup> to Hīnayāna ascetics. The “Mahāyāna Merits Extolling Sūtra”<sup>20</sup> stresses the merits of the Great Vehicle in contrast to Conservative Buddhism. The wish to be born in heaven in after-life persisted among common people. Some of them hankered to be born in the sixth heaven. Backed by this trend, some Mahāyāna sūtras were compiled.<sup>21</sup> Pure Lands of different Buddhas came to be supposed.<sup>22</sup> Just as the Pure Land Sūtras describe the blessed land of Amitābha, the Akṣobhya-vyūha gives an account of the land of Buddha Akṣobhya.<sup>23</sup> Akṣobhya Buddha was placed in the Eastern direction, whereas Amitābha Buddha was placed in the Western direction. Both made a salient contrast in Mahāyāna scriptures.<sup>24</sup> Probably the worship of Akṣobhya precedes that of Amitābha.<sup>25</sup>

In the same way the Karuṇā-puṇḍarika, “the Lotus of Mercy”, gives an account of the wonderland Padma of Buddha Padmottara,<sup>26</sup> whose life lasted for thirty ages of the world.

(2) The Maitreya-vyākaraṇa or Maitreya-samiti (弥勒下生成仏經).<sup>40</sup> This was composed in the 3rd century A. D.

(3) Kuan-mi-lu-shang-shêng-tou-shuai-t'ien-ching (觀弥勒上生兜率天經).<sup>41</sup> Maitreya is born in the Tuṣita heaven, and endeavors to save living beings. This was composed at the end of the 4th century A. D. Later than the other two, Tuṣita, the heaven of Maitreya, was greatly hankered for by devout worshippers.<sup>42</sup>

In the Maitreya-paripṛcchā<sup>43</sup> the Buddha explains the practice of Bodhisattvas to Maitreya. Ajita, the name of a disciple in the scriptures of Early Buddhism, came to be used as another name of Maitreya the Bodhisattva in later Buddhism.<sup>44</sup> The Adhyāśaya-saṃcodana-sūtra ('Sūtra for Inciting Determination')<sup>45</sup> tells how 60 bodhisattvas, who had fallen into distractions and laziness, were led by Maitreya to the presence of the Buddha, where he sought advice on their behalf. This sūtra is well known for the phrase: "whatever is well spoken, is spoken by the Buddha."<sup>46</sup>

The Bodhisattva who is most adored with devotion throughout Asiatic countries is Avalokiteśvara,<sup>47</sup> the "Lord who looks down", i. e., who looks down with infinite pity on all beings. But Avalokiteśvara was originally called Avalokitasvara (in early manuscripts). Some features of his figure can be traced to Vedic Aśvin.<sup>48</sup> He saves various kinds of living beings from sufferings. Help by Avalokiteśvara is extended immediately (tat-kṣaṇam) to his worshippers.<sup>49</sup> He refuses to assume Buddhahood until all beings are redeemed. The best-known scripture extolling this Bodhisattva is the 24th chapter of the Lotus Sūtra.<sup>50</sup> It rather promises his believers this-worldly rewards. The spirit of rendering help to others is taught in it.<sup>51</sup> In the Gaṇḍavyūha, his homeland is called Poṭalaka. In Pure Land Buddhism, he is placed beside Amitābha as his attendant.<sup>52</sup>

This text extolls the great compassion of Śākyamuni within this world against the sūtras extolling Akṣobhya or Amitābha. Vows of Amitābha are mentioned.<sup>27</sup>

It was composed prior to Chi-ch'ien (支謙) and Dharmarakṣa (who came to China in 412 A. D.). Some scholars consider that it came into existence after 550 A. D.<sup>29</sup>

The worship of Mañjuśrī came to the fore.<sup>30</sup> To worship Mañjuśrī, at one's death-bed was extolled in a sūtra (文殊師利般涅槃經).<sup>31</sup> In another sūtra (文殊師利問菩提經)<sup>32</sup> this Bodhisattva explains Enlightenment (大乘不思議神通境界經),<sup>33</sup> and in another he makes clear the thought of Ānimitta by means of magical power. In the Acintya-buddha-viṣaya-nirdeśa<sup>34</sup> Mañjuśrī explains the practice of Bodhisattvas. (Other sūtras<sup>35</sup> extolling Mañjuśrī were explained in other passages.) The Godai-Mountain (五台山 Wu-t'ai-shan), a holy place of Mañjuśrī in China, came to be known to both Northern and Southern India already in the 7th century A. D.<sup>36</sup>

The counterpart of Mañjuśrī was Bodhisattva Samantabhadra, who was very often mentioned with him.<sup>37</sup>

The worship of Maitreya Bodhisattva<sup>38</sup> as a future Buddha came to the fore. The triple sūtras of Maitreya (弥勒三部經) were especially esteemed in China and Korea. They are as follows:

- (1) Mi-lē-ta-ch'eng-fo-ching (弥勒大成仏經).<sup>39</sup> This was composed in the 3rd century A. D.

The Karuṇā-pundarika-sūtra was once very influential in feudal Japan. (Ryoshu Misaki in IBK., vol. 9, No. 1, Jan. 1961, pp. 16–21). Cf. Chapter IX.

Bhaiṣajyarāja, the “King of the Art of Healing”, was adored as one who protects suffering people with magical formulas and bestows wished-for things upon them, in chapters XXI and XXII of the “Lotus Sūtra”. In later days his worship came to the fore. Independent scriptures extolling him were composed. The Bhaiṣajya-guru-vaidūryaprabhāsa-pūrvapraṇidhāna-viśeṣavistara-sūtra (藥師如來本願經) extolls his virtues.<sup>53</sup> Seeing that it deals with benefits of this world and of the future world besides elucidating paradises in the East and West, the time of its appearance may be considered to have been fairly late.<sup>54</sup>

There exist four Chinese versions of the same sūtra extolling Bhaiṣajyaguru:

(a) Translation by Śrimitra of Kucha (帛尸梨蜜多羅).<sup>55</sup> Taisho, vol. 21, p. 532 b–p. 536 b;

(b) Translation by Dharmagupta. Taisho, vol. 14, p. 401 b–p. 404 b;

(c) Translation by Hsuan Tsang.<sup>56</sup> Taisho, vol. 14, p. 404 c–p. 408 b;

(d) Translation by I-ching. Taisho, vol. 14, p. 409 a–p. 418 a.

In (a), (b), (c) the Lord of Healing alone is the subject, whereas in (d) the 7 Buddhas including him are the subjects.

The oldest of them is (a), i. e. vol. 12 of Kuan-ting-ching (灌頂經 Taisho, No. 1331). Legend has it that it is a forged sūtra by Hui-chien (慧簡) in 457. It is likely that he formed the version summarizing some sūtras, but that he never translated it.<sup>57</sup>

There are some other sūtras<sup>58</sup> which extoll Bhaiṣajyaguru.

Based upon the findings in Tung-huang, Central Asia, it has been found that there were three versions of the Buddha-nāma-sūtra.<sup>59</sup> There are some Khotanese versions of this sūtra.<sup>60</sup>

In the course of glorifying Buddhas the speculation on the nature of Buddhas developed, and the theory of the triple body of Buddha was formed.<sup>61</sup>

<sup>53</sup> The Sanskrit text of the Bhaiṣajya-guru Sūtra was found (cf. Aurel Stein, JRAS, Oct. 1931, pp. 863–865) and published by Nalinaksha Dutt, IHQ, vol. (Takayoshi Shiga in IBK. vol. 11, No. 2, March 1963, pp. 176–177.) There was another version which was commented upon in Chinese (Taisho, No. 2766. vol. 85, p. 306 f.) It is said that the 藥師如來本行殊勝隨願即得陀羅尼經, a copy of which was found at the Kōfukuji temple, Nara, is another version. Cf. 仏書解説大辭典, vol. 11. s. v. There exists a New Khotanese translation of the Bhaiṣajyaguru-Vaidūryaprabharājasūtra. (Monumenta Serindica, vol. 4, Appendix, p. 356.)

In Tibetan there exists a text entitled Ārya-tathāgata-vaidūryaprabhanāma-baladhanasamādhidhāraṇī. (Tohoku Catalogue, No. 505.) It was critically edited and translated into Japanese by Keiyo Arai, Buzan Kyōgaku Taikai Kiyō, No. 4, Oct. 1976, pp. 124–136.

There are some sūtras in which the principal figures are those closely relevant to the Life of Buddha. In the Śuddhodanarāja-parinirvāṇa-sūtra<sup>62</sup> the Buddhist ideal of filial piety is expressed. It is only known that it was composed earlier than 450 A. D. In another sūtra (仏昇切利天為母說法經)<sup>63</sup> the story that the Buddha ascended to the Tuṣita heaven and taught his mother Māyā is the topic. In another (示教勝軍王經)<sup>64</sup> the Buddha gives a sermon to King Prasenajit of Kosala, and teaches him how to behave himself as a good king.<sup>65</sup> In another (孝經抄)<sup>66</sup> a Jātaka of Prasenajit and Mallikā is set forth. The Vaidūrya-rāja-sūtra<sup>67</sup> puts forth the tragical death of the cruel King Vaidūrya who massacred the Śākya tribe.

16.F. The Lotus Sūtra and Others<sup>1</sup>

16.F.i. The Texts of the Lotus Sūtra<sup>2</sup>

The most important Mahāyāna-sūtra, which was most influential throughout Buddhist countries, is the Saddharma-puṇḍarīka-sūtra "Lotus<sup>3</sup> of the Superb Religion."

Sanskrit originals of the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka-sūtra,<sup>4</sup> which are now available in print,

<sup>5</sup> A palm-leaf manuscript of this text in the 11th century was brought to Japan from Tibet by Ekai Kawaguchi. (With regard to the date of this MS., see W. Baruch: Beiträge zum Saddharma-puṇḍarīka-sūtra, Leiden, 1938.) It was photographically duplicated by Ekai Kawaguchi and Chōtatsu Ikeda and published by Bonbun Hokekyō Hanpukai (梵文法華經頒布会 The Society for the Distribution of Saddharmapundarika), Tokyo, Agency: Maruzen. This was collated by U. Wogihara and K. Tsuchida in their edition.

Sanskrit fragments of this text found in Central Asia were discussed by Sanada in IBK., Vol. 3, No. 1, p. 94 f.; by Bunpo Kojima (in Engl.) in IBK., Vol. 7, No. 2, March 1959, pp. 736 f. The manuscript collected by N. Th. Petrovsky was examined by Jakuun Kiyota in IBK., Vol. 5, No. 1, Jan. 1957, pp. 188–191. Some variants in the texts of the Lotus Sūtra were discussed by Bunpo Kojima (in Engl.) in IBK., Vol. 6, No. 1, Jan. 1958, p. 301 f. Ryūkoku Daigaku Ronshū, No. 361, March 1959, pp. 1–6; No. 367, March 1961, pp. 1–8. Heinz Bechert: Über die "Marburger Fragmente" des Saddharmapundarika. NAWG. Jahrgang 1972, Nr. 1. Some remarks on manuscripts of the Lotus Sūtra were given by Akira Yuyama, Hokke Bunka, No. 22, Sept. 1972, 6–7. A very old manuscript of Kumārajīva's version of the Lotus Sūtra was found in Central Asia by the Otani expedition. This may emend the current text. (Bunpo Kojima in IBK., Vol. 9, No. 2, March 1961, pp. 61–66). The Gāthā dialect of this sūtra is almost the same throughout all the chapters, and one does not find much difference from that in other scriptures. (K. Tsuchida in Shūkyō Kenkyū, NS. Vol. 12, No. 1, p. 50 f.). However, some Sanskrit manuscripts of the Lotus Sūtra have unique grammatical features. [Bunpo Kojima (in Engl.), in IBK., Vol. 8, No. 1, Jan. 1960, p. 374 f.]. Stylistic repetition is quite unique of the Lotus Sūtra. This was discussed by Yasuaki Nara in NBGN., Vol. 23, March 1964, pp. 1–16, No. 24, 1964, pp. 1–25. Numericals in the Lotus Sūtra were examined by Senchū Murano, IBK., Vol. 16, No. 1, Dec. 1967, pp. 83–85. Sanskrit fragments of the first chapter of the Lotus Sūtra unearthed in Khādalik were examined by Bunpo Kojima in IBK., Vol. XIII, No. 1, Jan. 1965, pp. 379 ff. Gāthās of the first chapter were studied and translated into Japanese by U. Wogihara and K. Tsuchida in Seigo Kenkyū, Vol. 1, p. 135 f.; also in Bukkyō Gakuto, Vol. 4, p. 10 f. Those of the second chapter by the same authors in Seigo Kenkyū, Vol. 2, p. 77 f. Fragments of the second chapter have been discovered in Khādalik. (B. Kojima in BGK., No. 7, p. 54 f.: Nos. 18 and 19, Oct. 1961, pp. 21–22). The second chapter as a whole was discussed by Waka Shirado in IBK., Vol. 10, 1, Jan. 1962, pp. 261–264; by Bunpo Kojima in Nanto Bukkyō, No. 11, April 1962, pp. 73–86; again examined by Bunpo Kojima, IBK., Vol. 16, No. 1, Dec. 1967, pp. 172–174. The verse 103 of the second chapter of the Lotus Sūtra was discussed by Hirofumi Toda in IBK., Vol. XIII, No. 2, March 1965, pp. 208–212. The 134th verse of the second chapter, by Hirofumi Toda, IBK., Vol. XIV, No. 2, March 1966, pp. 150–154. The gāthās of Adhimukti-parivarta (IV) were discussed by Bunpo Kojima in IBK., Vol. XII, No. 1, Jan. 1964, pp. 397 ff. Gāthās of the vyākaraṇa-parivarta (VI) were examined by G. M. Bongard-Levin and E. N. Tyomkin based on an unknown manuscript from the N. F. Petrovsky collection. (Indo-Iranian Journal, Vol. 8, No. 4, 1965, pp. 268–274.) Conjectures by Japanese editors were verified by them. Supplementary remarks on the studies by Bongard-Levin and Tyomkin were made in full detail by Akira Yuyama, IJ., Vol. IX, No. 2, 1966, pp. 85–112 (in Engl.) A Khādalik manuscript of the Dharma-bhāṇaka-parivarta (X), discussed by Bunpo Kojima (in Engl.) in IBK., Vol. 5, No. 1, Jan. 1957, pp. 317 f.; IBK., Vol. 14, No. 1, Dec. 1965, pp. 55–59. About the Stūpa-saṃdarsana (XI) of the Lotus Sūtra, Sadahiko Kariya in IBK., Vol. 11, No. 1, Jan. 1963, pp. 138–139. The chapter (Stūpasāṃdarsana-parivarta) of the Sanskrit manuscript unearthed in Farhād-Beg-Yailaki was discussed by Bunpo Kojima, in Bukkyō-gaku Kenkyū, No. 7, 1952, pp. 54–59. G. Honda: Seigo Kenkyū, No. 7, p. 3 f. Some gāthās of the Stūpasāṃdarsana-parivarta were discussed by Jakuun Kiyota, IBK. Vol. XVIII, No. 2, March 1970, pp. 416–

Manuscripts of the Lotus Sūtra can be classified in three groups: 1) Nepalese version, 2) Gilgit (Kashmir) version, and 3) Central Asian version, with the last one probably being the oldest.<sup>8</sup> There was found a Khotanese text also.<sup>9</sup>

Seventeen total and partial translations of this sūtra in Chinese were mentioned in the ancient Catalogues of Sūtras, but only three entire translations have been preserved to date.<sup>10</sup> Among them, the Chinese version<sup>11</sup> by Kumārajīva has been esteemed as the most authoritative one, although it<sup>12</sup> contains a number of dubious expressions which led later followers to misunderstanding sentences of the text.<sup>13</sup>

418. The Utsāha-parivarta (XII) of the Lotus Sūtra was discussed by Jakuun Kiyota in IBK., Vol. X, No. 1, Jan. 1962, pp. 76–81. The Sukhavihāra-parivarta (XIII) was discussed by Kaishuku Mochizuki in IBK., Vol. IX, No. 1, Jan. 1961, pp. 209–212; by Hirofumi Toda, IBK., Vol. 16, No. 1, March 1968, pp. 154–161. Various Sanskrit and Chinese versions of the Sukhavihāra-parivarta were compared. (Jakuun Kiyota in IBK., Vol. XI, No. 2, March 1963, pp. 226–230.) The caturtho dharmah of the sukhavihāra is discussed by Hirofumi Toda, IBK. vol. XVI, No. 2, March 1968, 154–635. Some passages of Sanskrit and Chinese versions of the Bodhisattvapṛthivivivarasamudgama-parivarta (XIV) of the Lotus Sūtra were compared by Jakuun Kiyota in IBK., Vol. XII, No. 2, March 1964, pp. 813 ff. The Tathāgatāyuspramāṇa-parivarta (XV) was discussed by Bunpo Kojima in Ryūkyō Daigaku Ronshū, No. 333, Oct. 1956 (=Morikawa Comm. Vol. pp. 44–48.) The tathāgata-rddhy-abhisamskāra-parivarta (XX) of the Lotus Sūtra is discussed by Tsubuhiko Taga in IBK., Vol. 7, No. 1, Dec. 1958, pp. 166 ff.; by Bunpo Kojima in Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, Nos. 8 and 9, pp. 9–16. On the Samantabhadrotsāhana-parivarta (XXVI), cf. Bunpo Kojima in Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, Nos. 16 and 17, pp. 84–86. The word “aṣṭapada” in the extant versions of the Lotus Sūtra must have been “aṣṭapaṭṭa” in the prototype text, and it meant “eight crossings.” (Yutaka Iwamoto in Acta Asiatica, No. 9, Sept. 1965, pp. 78–82) (in German). The avadāna mentioned in the Lotus Sūtra is discussed by Kazunori Mochizuki, IBK., Vol. XV, No. 1, Dec. 1966, pp. 382–385. Meters in the Petrovsky manuscripts (found in Central Asia) of the Lotus Sūtra were discussed by Hirofumi Toda, NBGN. No. 36, March 1971, 33–49; Tokushima Daigaku Kyōyōbu Kiyō, vol. 7, 1972, 93–161. He criticizes Edgerton’s opinion. A comprehensive survey is given in the following work: Akira Yuyama: A Bibliography of the Sanskrit Texts of the Saddharmapundarikasūtra. Canberra: Australian National University Press, 1970. (A comprehensive survey of all manuscripts of the Sūtra.)

<sup>8</sup> An exhaustive collated edition of all manuscripts is due to be published by a group of professors of Rissho University from 1977 on, in 15 volumes.

Iwamoto’s translation from Sanskrit in Iwanami Bunko, Tokyo, 1962. Review on Sakamoto and Iwamoto’s tr. in Indo Bunka, No. 3, 1962, p. 73. The Chinese translation of this sūtra by Kumārajīva was translated into English. W. E. Soothill: The Lotus of the Wonderful Law. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1930. (Reviewed by J. K. Shryock, JAOS., Vol. 51, 1931, p. 185.) A revised version of this work was recently published. Myōhō-Renge-Kyō. The Sutra of the Lotus Flower of the Wonderful Law. Translated by Bunnō Katō, and revised by W. E. Soothill and Wilhelm Schiffer. Tokyo: Kosei Publishing Company, 1971. The Lotus Sutra. Translated from the Chinese by Senchū Murano. Tokyo: Nichirenshū Shūmuin, 1964. Kumārajīva’s Chinese version was translated into contemporary Japanese by Mitsuyoshi Saigusa (Tokyo: Daisan Bunmeisha, 1974), 3 vols. The outline of Kumārajīva’s Lotus Sūtra is epitomized by Senchū Murano, An Outline of the Lotus Sūtra (Tokyo: Young East, August 1969).

<sup>13</sup> Kōgaku Fuse in IBK., Vol. 5, No. 1, Jan. 1957, pp. 73–82. The Sanskrit original of the term ‘引導’ was samānaya or vinaya. (Jakuun Kiyota in IBK., Vol. 14, No. 1, Dec. 1965, pp. 170–173). The

The Lotus Sūtra cited in the Mahaprajñāpāramitopadeśaśāstra seems to have been a version which is between Kumārajīva's original (妙法華) and Dharmarakṣa's original (正法華).<sup>14</sup>

Comparative studies upon the Chinese versions, and the manuscripts found in Central Asia, Nepal, Gilgit etc. have been under way in recent years.<sup>15</sup> This sūtra had at least four periods to pass through before it was completed. That is to say, the gāthās of class I came into being in the first period, and the second period saw the appearance of its expatiation in prose. In the third period an enlargement of those of class II was made, and in the fourth the chapters beginning with the Bhaiṣajyarājapūrvayoga-parivarta XXII were added.<sup>16</sup> The prototype of the sūtra now existing was produced in the first century A. D., and the original consisting of 27 chapters was already existent in 150 A. D.<sup>17</sup> That is to say, the first 22 chapters had already been in existence before 100 A. D.<sup>18</sup> Could we presume that Nāgārjuna lived about the end of the second century, we might conclude that the central part of the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka had already been in existence at the end of the first century A. D.,<sup>19</sup> and the sūtra was completed about the end of the second century A. D. in Gandhāra or somewhere in the neighbourhood of Kapiśa.<sup>20</sup>

The above-mentioned presumption advanced by various scholars is further confirmed by the facts relating to the social background of the coming into existence of Mahāyāna Buddhism. The parable of a son of the money-lender who had amassed a huge fortune by collecting exorbitant interest from his clients, is given in the fourth chapter (adhimukti-parivarta 信解品) of the sūtra (“出入息利乃遍他国商估賈客亦甚衆多”).

bahu-dhana-dhānya-hiraṇya-kośa-koṣṭhāgāraś ca bhaved bahu-suvarṇarūpyamaṇi-muktā-vaidūrya-saṅkha-silā-pravāda-jātarūpa-rajata-samanvāgataś ca bhaved bahu-dāsi-dāsa-karmakara-pauruṣeyaś ca bhaved bahu-hasty-aśva-ratha-gaveḍakasamanvāgataś ca bhavet. mahāparivāraś ca bhaven mahājanapadeṣu ca dhanikaḥ syād āyoga-prayoga-kṛṣi-vaṇijya-prabhūtaś ca bhavet.<sup>21</sup>

On his death-bed, the parable runs, he ordered his son to call his relatives for a conference, to which the king and his ministers came.

“臨欲終時，而命其子，辣会親族，国王大臣，刹利居士，皆悉已集。”<sup>22</sup>

sagrhapatis.....maraṇakālasamaye pratyupasthite taṃ daridrāpuruṣam ānyā mahato jñātisaṃghasyopanāmayitvā rājño vā rājamātrasya vā purato naigama-jānapadānāṃ ca saṃmukham evaṃ saṃśrāvayet.<sup>23</sup>

The account of this capitalist, who was so powerful that he could call to his death-bed

even the king and his ministers, tells how highly developed was the monetary economy during this age.

As a matter of fact, India's monetary economy made a precipitous advance in the period of Wema Kādphises (after about 37 A. D.).<sup>24</sup> It is therefore thinkable that the a quo of the period of the appearance of the Saddharma-puṇḍarika was about 40 A. D. Many stūpas remaining in North-West India and Hindustan are those built in the period of King Vāsudeva. In fact, those built during his period are overwhelmingly large in number. And after he passed on the erection of stūpas abruptly went out of fashion, as is evidenced from archaeological relics of the age.<sup>25</sup> Now, since King Vāsudeva reigned during 202–229, it is certain that the portion of the Saddharmapuṇḍarika up to the XXII chapter came into being some time between 40 and 220 A. D.

An inscription referring to the Three Vehicles (55 A. D.) was found.<sup>26</sup> This may indicate the date of the formation of the Lotus Sūtra.

The Chinese version of this sūtra was widely recited in Central Asia.<sup>27</sup> The chapter "Devadatta" (提婆品) of the Miao-fa-lien-houa-ching (妙法蓮華經), the translation of the Saddharmapuṇḍarika-sūtra by Kumārajīva, is really one done by Ea-hsien (法獻) and Fa-i (法意) in collaboration and was interpolated therein in later days.<sup>28</sup> Of the chapter "Devadatta" there is one translation in the Uigrian language.<sup>29</sup>

The Lotus Sūtra owes various ideas to works prior to it.<sup>30</sup> It was produced with materials obtained from various sūtras, e. g. the Diamond Sūtra,<sup>31</sup> some of its special features being derived from the Pravaradevaparipṛcchā (勝天王般若經).<sup>32</sup> It has been asserted that even the influence by the Chāndogya-upaniṣad can be found in this sūtra.<sup>33</sup> The sūtra reflects some events of the life of the Buddha and has his disciples appear.<sup>34</sup> The worship of the Two Buddhas in the Jewel Tower Chapter was derived from the worship of Kāśyapa Buddha.<sup>35</sup> This sūtra avails itself of various parables.<sup>36</sup>

The whole structure of the Lotus Sūtra is dramatic; scenes change often and suddenly; Buddhas, bodhisattvas, and living beings behave themselves very actively and lively. Some scholars took it as the influence of Indian dramas whose origin has been very controversial among scholars, whether it was genuinely indigenous or was Greek influence.<sup>37</sup>

16.F.ii. The Thought of the Lotus Sūtra<sup>1</sup>

In this sūtra the Buddha gives his believers a single “vehicle,”<sup>2</sup> the “Buddha vehicle,” which carries them to their final goal. Everyone who has merely heard the Buddha’s preaching, and who has performed any kind of meritorious actions, can become a Buddha.<sup>3</sup> It is only for the sake of expediency that there are three “vehicles,” namely that of the disciples, that of the Pratyekabuddhas, and that of Bodhisattvas,<sup>4</sup> by means of which Nirvāna can be attained. In the Lotus Sūtra the One Vehicle (ekayāna) means the Buddha Vehicle (buddhayāna), and the bodhisattvayāna means one of the Three Vehicles.<sup>5</sup>

Mahāyāna Buddhism admitted principally three, different levels of understanding among its believers.<sup>6</sup> The idea of expediency (upāya or upāya-kausalya) was exceedingly esteemed.<sup>7</sup>

So all people are entitled to be called Bodhisattvas.<sup>8</sup> Well-known Bodhisattvas such as Mañjuśrī, Samantabhadra, Bhaiṣajyaguru, etc., play subsidiary roles, whereas those who were newly given qualification to attain Enlightenment and those who appeared on the earth (by which the Eternal Buddha is meant symbolically) are important as Bodhisattvas of essential significance.

In the Lotus Sūtra all living beings are called ‘children of Buddha.’<sup>9</sup> Its teaching centers on the faith in Śākyamuni Buddha.<sup>10</sup> The intelligence and intuition of Buddha were greatly extolled.<sup>11</sup>

The thought of the Three Vehicles can be traced in the literature before the Lotus Sūtra,<sup>12</sup> already in the Abhidharma-Mahāvibhāṣā-śāstra.<sup>13</sup> The Three Vehicles are called with various names.<sup>14</sup> The practice of pratyekabuddhas in the Three Vehicles can be traced to non-Buddhist (Jain, etc.) origin.<sup>15</sup> Śrāvakas were tolerated in some Mahāyāna Sūtras.<sup>16</sup> The thought of setting forth prophesy (prediction) that someone will attain perfect enlightenment in the future (vyākaraṇa) originating in early Buddhism, culminates in the Lotus Sūtra.<sup>17</sup>

In a passage of the second chapter of Kumārajīva's version the idea of the Ten Categories is mentioned. This idea became very important in later Chinese and Japanese Buddhism. This passage is missing in the Sanskrit manuscripts found in Central Asia,<sup>18</sup> but it is quite likely that it was in the original of Kumārajīva's version.<sup>19</sup>

Disciplines<sup>20</sup> for ascetics are enjoined in the XIIIth chapter (Sukhavihāraparivarta) of the sūtra.<sup>21</sup> The Lotus Sūtra enumerates various kinds of karma, and embodies the ideal of deliverance from them.<sup>22</sup>

One characteristic of the concept of bodhisattva in the Lotus Sūtra is the apostle idea, which is quite unique of this sūtra.<sup>23</sup>

The central concept of the latter part of the sūtra was regarded by Chinese and Japanese dogmatists as that of the Eternal Buddha, which was elaborated upon in later days.<sup>24</sup> But it was the magical effectiveness of this scripture that has become very popular among common people of Asia.<sup>25</sup>

The Lotus Sūtra was very influential in India. The thought of the "One Vehicle" was regarded as the essence of Buddhism by later Esoteric Buddhists, such as Advayavajra (11th or early 12th century).<sup>26</sup> However, it was asserted by some other thinkers that the theory of the One Vehicle and that of the Three Vehicles should be adopted according to the situation in which one is placed.<sup>27</sup>

16.F.iii. Other Sūtras with Close Relation to the Lotus Sūtra

There are some sūtras which can be regarded as predecessors of the Lotus Sūtra. The Śūraṅgama-samādhi-nirdeśa<sup>1</sup> in which the Śūraṅgama-samādhi meditation is discussed, harbingers the Lotus Sūtra in many respects.

The Mahābherihāraka-parivarta-sūtra (大法鼓經)<sup>2</sup> is supposed to be a forerunner of the Lotus Sūtra. The Avinivartaniya-cakra-sūtra (不退轉法輪經)<sup>3</sup> seems to be a link between the Wisdom Sūtra and the Lotus Sūtra. The Buddhabhāṣita-sarva-vaipulya-vidyāsiddha-sūtra (濟諸方等學經),<sup>4</sup> is also closely connected with it. The "Sūtra on the Immeasurable Meanings" (無量義經)<sup>5</sup> lays the theoretical basis of the One Vehicle thought from the standpoint of Voidness.<sup>6</sup> It teaches the immediate way to attain Enlightenment. It is believed by some scholars to have been composed in China.<sup>7</sup> The Samantabhadra-bodhisattva-dhyāna-caryādharmasūtra (觀普賢菩薩行法經)<sup>8</sup> claims that this sūtra was taught at the end of the life of the Buddha. The same theme as in the Lotus Sūtra can be noticed in another sūtra (持世經).<sup>9</sup> Here a Bodhisattva (called 持世) asks the Buddha about various teachings. Various Hinayāna teachings were accepted as Mahāyānistic. Another sūtra (called 文殊師利普超三昧經)<sup>10</sup> also aims at the synthesis of the practices of Śrāvakas, Pratyekabuddhas and Buddhas, by means of the practices of Bodhisattvas. This can be regarded as another offshoot of the same current as the Lotus Sūtra.<sup>11</sup>

The Mahāsatya-nirgrantha-putra-vyākaraṇa-sūtra (大薩遮尼乾子所說經),<sup>12</sup> and its prototype ("菩薩行方便境界神通變化經"<sup>13</sup>) are scriptures in which the conciliatory character of the Lotus Sūtra has been further expanded and made thoroughgoing. It came into existence later than the Lotus Sūtra.<sup>14</sup> Here the spirit of tolerance is conspicuous, with a Jain ascetic as the preacher of Buddhist teachings.

The Suvarṇaprabhāsa-sūtra,<sup>15</sup> developing some traits already betrayed in the Lotus Sūtra, makes up a transitory link to Tantric Buddhism. This sūtra is distinguishable for the reason that it elucidates the infinity of the life of Buddha<sup>16</sup> and contains various features, such as political ideas and Esoteric trends.<sup>17</sup> The worship of Goddess Sarasvatī is distinctively mentioned.<sup>18</sup> This sūtra became very popular among Chinese and Japanese due to its magical power.<sup>19</sup> An edition in Sanskrit was published by Hōkei Idzumi and another by J. Nobel. The latter published a Tibetan edition also.<sup>20</sup> Fragments in the North Aryan languages have been discovered.<sup>21</sup> The existing Sanskrit version of the sūtra is nearest to the translation by Dharmakṣema. The original came into existence in the 4th century, and, being gradually augmented, finally became similar to the original of the translation by I-tsing.<sup>22</sup> The last chapter (囑累品) seems to have been added in later days by some editor.<sup>23</sup> At any rate, the age in which this sūtra saw light was the period of the Gupta Dynasty.<sup>24</sup> This sūtra became very important for its political thought set forth especially in the thirteenth chapter (Rājasāstra-parivarta).<sup>25</sup>

One sūtra (金光明懺悔滅罪法),<sup>26</sup> as an appendix to the above-mentioned sūtra, was used for repentance: a Chinese story of a Chinese who practised repentance by means of this sūtra is related in it.

16.G. The Buddhāvataṃsaka-sūtra

16.G.i. Texts

The Buddhāvataṃsaka<sup>1</sup>-sūtra has been a scripture of great importance in various cultural areas of the world.<sup>2</sup> The entire body of the huge Buddha-avatāṃsaka-sūtra,<sup>3</sup> whose Sanskrit text has not wholly been preserved, has come down in two Chinese versions, the one translated by Buddhahadra<sup>4</sup> together with other monks in 418–420 A. D. in sixty volumes, and the other by Śikṣānanda in 695–699 in eighty volumes, and also in the Tibetan version.<sup>5</sup> The original name of the Houa-yen-ching (the Buddhāvataṃsaka-mahāvaiṣṭya-sūtra 華嚴經) seems to have been Gaṇḍavyūha.<sup>6</sup> It is sometimes called 雜華經 or 百千經.<sup>7</sup>

The “Sūtra on the Original Action of Bodhisattva” (菩薩本業經)<sup>8</sup> is very often regarded as the prototype of the Buddha-avatāṃsaka-sūtra. However, the central figure in the former is Śākyamuni with his progress to enlightenment, whereas that in the latter is Mahā-Vairocana Buddha.<sup>9</sup>

With regard to the problems of the date when, and the place where the sūtra was composed, the following is known. By about 350 A. D., the sūtra had been made into one complete book of 60 volumes.<sup>10</sup> Some scholars hold the view that the sūtra came into existence before the time of Nāgārjuna, i. e., before the second century.<sup>11</sup> At any rate it preceded the Larger Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra; but, perhaps it can not be said to be older than the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka. The youth Sudhana (善財童子) is recorded to have called on Bodhisattva Avalokiteśvara to be taught, but the gāthās of the 24th chapter (Avalokiteśvara-vikurvaṇanirdeśa) of the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka is in a form older than that of the Gaṇḍavyūha.<sup>12</sup>

It is generally admitted that the Sanskrit text now entitled “Gaṇḍavyūha”<sup>13</sup> and the lishing Society, 1934–1936. The fifth part which would contain varia lectio was not published because its MS. was destroyed in the war. New revised edition of photographic reprint, 1 vol. 551 pp. Tokyo: The Suzuki Foundation. Recently a critical edition was edited: The Gaṇḍavyūhasūtra, ed. by P. L. Vaidya. Buddhist Sanskrit Texts, No. 5. Darbhanga: the Mithila Sanskrit Institute, 1960. The latter was critically examined and corrected by Kazuya Haseoka in IBK. vol. XIII, No. 1, Jan. 1965, pp. 392 ff. Textual variations of various versions of the Gaṇḍavyūha were discussed by Kazuya Haseoka in IBK. vol. 11, No. 1, Jan. 1963, pp. 320 ff.

<sup>14</sup> The Daśabhūmiśvara-sūtra was formerly published by J. Rahder and Shinryū Susa (須佐晋竜) (cf. Winternitz, II, p. 327; 626 f.). The seventh stage of the Daśabhūmika-sūtra was edited and examined by J. Rahder, Acta Or. vol. 4, 1926, 214–256. Afterwards, a more critical edition based upon eight MSS. was published: Daśabhūmiśvaro nāma Mahāyāna-sūtram. Ed. by Ryūkō Kondō. Tokyo: The Daijō Bukkyō Kenyō-kai, Aug. 1936. vi+219 pp. It was translated into English. (Megumu Honda: Annotated translation of the Daśabhūmika-sūtra. Śatapitaka, 1967, 115–276.) It was translated into Japanese with corrections on the editions and critical comments by Shōshin Tatsuyama: Bombun Wayaku Jūji-kyō, (梵文和訳十地經). Tsukinowa in Shūkyō Kenkyū, NS. vol. 12, No. 5, p. 76 f.). A concordance of the various versions of the Daśabhūmika-sūtra was made by Shōhō Takemura in Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, Nos. 16 and 17, pp. 71–83. century or early 9th century.<sup>22</sup> At the end of the Gaṇḍavyūha, both in Sanskrit manuscripts and in Chinese and Tibetan translations, we find the Bhadracarī-praṇidhāna-gāthāḥ, “the Prayer Verses concerning the Pious Acts.”<sup>23</sup>

There was an independent sūtra in which the main speaker was Samantabhadra.<sup>24</sup> Later, it was incorporated into the Buddhāvataṃsaka.<sup>25</sup> The second chapter of “The Sūtra on the Original Actions of the Bodhisattva” (菩薩本業經)<sup>26</sup> is another version of the Daśavihāra of the Buddhāvataṃsaka-sūtra. In the “Ornament of Enlightenment-Mind Sūtra” (莊嚴菩提心經)<sup>27</sup> the Enlightenment-Mind (bodhicitta) is explained with the teaching of the Daśabhūmika-sūtra. The Buddhāvataṃsakatathāgata-guṇajñānācintya-viṣayāvatāra-nirdeśa-sūtra (仏華嚴入如来德智不思議境界經)<sup>28</sup> is a precursor to the Great Buddhāvataṃsaka-sūtra. “The Chapter on the Wonderful Object in the Great Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra” (大方広仏華嚴經不思議境界分)<sup>29</sup> seems to be an abridgement of the contents of the text of the Great Buddhāvataṃsaka-sūtra.<sup>30</sup> A sūtra that exists in Tibetan alone, called the Prasāntaviniścaya-pratihāryasamādhi-sūtra,<sup>31</sup> sets forth a kind of thought similar to that of the Avataṃsaka-sūtra.

The thought of the Tathāgatotpattisambhava-nirdeśa-sūtra, which was composed before the third century,<sup>32</sup> seems to have derived from the Gaṇḍavyūha.<sup>33</sup>

The portions which were at first compiled as independent sūtras were finally put together.

In the introductory portion the throne at Buddhagayā on which Śākyamuni attained Enlightenment is represented as symbolizing the Lotus-Store-Ornament World (蓮華藏莊嚴世界), i. e., the realm of the Truth.<sup>2</sup> Unlike other sūtras, it is not Śākyamuni, but bodhisattvas and other divine or human beings who preach in this sūtra; their preachings are sanctified by their being ascribed to the period immediately after the enlightenment of the Buddha. Sāriputta and other great disciples are said not to have understood the purport of the sermons.<sup>3</sup> The ultimate state of the Enlightened One is here described as "the Ocean Seal Meditation",<sup>4</sup> although various meditations are taught in this sūtra.<sup>5</sup>

The doctrine of bhūmis or the Ten Stages<sup>6</sup> by which Buddhahood may be attained was first formulated among sects of Conservative Buddhism, developed in the Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras, and was finally established in the Buddha-avatamsaka.<sup>7</sup> When the idea of the Ten Bhūmis came into existence, the life of the Buddha was adapted to the scheme, as in the cases of the Mahāvastu, Prajñāpāramitā and Buddhāvatamsaka-sūtras.<sup>8</sup> In this connection, a feature of this sūtra is the frequent use of the number "ten", which represents continuation of many,<sup>9</sup> or the total of natural numbers.<sup>10</sup>

The Sūtra is relevant to various religious and philosophical thoughts.<sup>11</sup> According to the Daśabhūmika-sūtra, the mode of action of Superior Wisdom (prajñākāra) differs with sentient beings. The Superior Wisdom founded upon morality (śīla) and concentration (samādhi) is distinguished from the inferior wisdom dominated by ignorance and wrong desire.<sup>12</sup> In order to exhort disciples to practise meditations, a sort of idealism that all the universe is nothing but the outcome of Mind (cittamātraka) is strenuously taught.<sup>13</sup> Already in the Daśabhūmika-sūtra the thought of External Power is set forth.<sup>14</sup>

The interconnection<sup>15</sup> between one individual and the whole universe was especially stressed by the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra, which asserted that the altruistic spirit of benevolence or compassion (maitri, karuṇā) should be the fundamental principle of Mahāyāna Buddhism. The various aspects of this spirit were set forth in many passages.<sup>16</sup>

This sūtra propounds the manifestation of all kinds of the Buddha's activity as the natural outflow of the Cosmic Body caused by the Buddha's great compassion towards living beings (tathāgata-gotra-saṃbhava). "Now, in every living being, there exists the Essence of the Tathāgata, arisen in the form of embryo. But these living beings do not know about it."<sup>17</sup>

In the works of Kegon some scholars try to find the logic of Sokuhi, i. e. "self-identity in absolute contradictions."<sup>18</sup>

The bodhisattva aspiring for the enlightenment displays various activities basing himself on bodhicitta ("The Mind for Enlightenment").<sup>19</sup> This sūtra stresses the significance of 'good friends'. They are indispensable for our elevating ourselves spiritually.<sup>20</sup>

Throughout the whole Buddhāvataṃsaka-sūtra we find many sayings which remind us of the Mādhyamika school. The truth or reality is often expressed in its Chinese versions with the terms 実相 or 諸法実相, which originate in the translations of Kumārajīva. Their Sanskrit original terms are dharmatā, sarvadharmāṇāṃ dharmatā, dharmāṇāṃ gambhīradharmatā, dharmāṇāṃ dharmalakṣaṇa, sarvadharmatathatā, bhūta, sarva-dharmāṇāṃ bhūtanaya, dharmasvabhāva, prakṛti, tattvasya lakṣaṇa. Although their connotations are different, they virtually mean the same principle, which is, in actuality, not different from Dependent Origination (pratītyasamutpāda).<sup>21</sup>

It has often been believed that the philosophy of Plotinus was highly influenced by Indian thought. In the Ennead we find some passages which remind us of the sayings of the Buddhāvataṃsaka-sūtra. It is probable that the latter influenced the former.<sup>22</sup>

The Chinese versions of the Buddhāvataṃsaka-sūtra are not literal translations faithful to the Sanskrit original, but occasionally betray modifications or twisted interpretations by the Chinese translators so that they would be acceptable to the common people of ancient China. In some passages Confucian influences can be noticed. (a) Indians, including Buddhists, spoke very nonchalantly about sex relations. However, it seems that at least those among the Chinese who followed the Confucian rules of propriety, disliked outspoken descriptions of these things and in their translations of the sūtra they tried to bypass them. To use such words as “embrace” or “kiss” in the holy scripture was not permissible for gentlemen educated in Confucian propriety, and so the translators masked the vulgar meaning of these words by way of transliteration with abstruse Chinese characters. (b) The Chinese translators always had the ethics of social hierarchy in mind. In the original Sanskrit text of the sūtra there is a story that a prostitute fell deeply in love with a prince. In ancient Indian society certain kinds of prostitutes ranked rather high in the social scale and were rich and privileged. In a Confucian society this would not be tolerated. It was unthinkable that a girl of lower birth should court a prince. So the whole story was emended in the Chinese versions. In a story of a millionaire-navigator his status as slave (dāsa) is not translated in the Chinese versions.<sup>23</sup>

This sūtra has been very influential throughout the whole history of Korean and Japanese religions and the daily life of common people up to the present.

<sup>22</sup> There are some similarities between the philosophy of this sūtra and that of Plotinus (e. g. Enneados II, 9, 16 and Śikṣānanda's Tr. vol. X. Taisho, vol. ## 16.H. Pure Land Buddhism and the Ratnakūta-sūtra

16.H.i. Pure Land of Amitābha

laymen.<sup>7</sup> The idea that Amitābha receives his believers had its origin in Pali literature.<sup>8</sup>

This Buddha had two names: Amitāyus and Amitābha from early days.<sup>9</sup> But the appellation 'Amitābha' appeared earlier than the appellation 'Amitāyus', and later it was associated with the story of Dharmākara in his previous existences.<sup>10</sup> The traditional philosophical explanation of both the epithets is as follows: Since the wisdom of emptiness pervades the whole atmosphere and reaches the dharma-spheres in the ten directions without limitation, it is called the "Infinite Light". The great compassion that develops infinitely in the infinite course of history of humankind is called the "Infinite Life".<sup>11</sup> This Buddha had other various names also.<sup>12</sup>

Before the composition of the Larger Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra there were the worshippers of Śākyamuni, those of Akṣobhya, those of Amitābha and so on, among whom there were conflicts with regard to their beliefs and thoughts;<sup>13</sup> and finally, the Pure Land of Amitābha became the most longed for by Northern Buddhists. In the Buddhāvataṃsaka-sūtra the pure land of Amitābha was regarded as the most inferior one among many pure lands, which are nearest to the defiled, mundane world (sahā).<sup>14</sup> It means that it was thought most accessible to common people. The tendency to suppose the existence of a happier land in the western direction is a religious belief which can be noticed among primitive tribes,<sup>15</sup> and Pure Land Buddhism must have shared it.<sup>16</sup>

In earlier days the worship of Amitābha was closely connected with stūpa worship, but in later days both came to be separated. That is why there are few references to stūpa worship in Pure Land Sūtras.<sup>17</sup>

The Jātaka-like legend of Dharmākara is supposed to have originated somewhere in the district near Gandhāra under the reign of the Kuṣāna dynasty.<sup>18</sup> While he was a monk Dharmākara, he maintained the original vows (pūrvapraṇidhāna)<sup>19</sup> to establish Pure Land.

The idea of the 'Original Vow' can be traced in early Buddhism.<sup>20</sup>

When Pure Land Buddhism appeared for the first time, the consciousness of crisis that

The worship of Amitābha Buddha is taught or mentioned in various sūtras. But the teachings of the Pure Land (or the Pure Realm)<sup>23</sup> as the Buddha-land of Amitābha Buddha<sup>24</sup> are chiefly based on the following scriptures.....

<sup>25</sup> The tradition that the Larger Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra was translated jointly by Buddhahadra and Ratnamegha has been proved to be true. (Kōtatsu Fujita, IBK. vol. 15, No. 2, March 1967, 22–31.) Of the Larger Sukhāvativyūha there are at least 25 manuscripts, mostly in Japan and Nepal. (Kōtatsu Fujita, Nakamura Comm. Vol. pp. 223–236.)

<sup>26</sup> The Sanskrit texts of the Larger and Smaller Sukhāvativyūha-sūtras were tr. into Japanese in collation with Chinese versions by B. (Both were published in book form). 12+5+346 pp. Unrai Wogihara corrected Max Müller's edition in collation with the Tibetan version and unpublished Sanskrit manuscripts and Chinese versions. The corrected Sanskrit text and the Japanese tr. by U. Wogihara were published with the Tibetan version collated, and the Japanese tr. from the Tibetan version, by E. Kawaguchi and with Takakusu's English tr. (just as in SBE., vol. 49, pt. 2), 梵藏和英合璧淨土三部經. Tokyo: Daitō Shuppansha, Dec. 1931. 502 pp. cf. Winternitz, vol. 2, pp. 310 ff. However, it seems that Wogihara emended too much Max Müller's text in some passages, which were pointed out by H. Nakamura in the Japanese tr.: Jōdo Sanbūkyō (Iwanami Bunko, 1963) cited below. Recently a new critical edition of the Sanskrit text of the Sukhāvativyūha was edited by Atsuji Ashikaga, Kyoto, Hōzōkan, 1965. vii+67 pp. (Reviewed by Naoshiro Tsuji, Suzuki Nenpō, No. 2, 1965, 83–84.) The Sanskrit texts of the Larger and Smaller Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtras were translated into Japanese by H. Nakamura and K. Kino, and the traditionally resorted-to Three Sūtras (i. e. both sūtras of Sukhāvati and the Amitāyurbuddhadhyāna-sūtra) of Pure Land Buddhism were translated from Chinese into Japanese by K. Hayashima. (H. Nakamura, K. Hayashima and K. Kino: Jōdo Sanbu-kyō 淨土三部經 vol. 1, Dec. 1963. 376 pp., vol. 2, Sept. 1964. 217+13 pp. Iwanami Bunko, The Iwanami Press, Tokyo. Rev. by Y. Iwamoto in Seinan Ajia Kenkyū, No. 13, Dec. 1964, pp. 59–70.) The Larger Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra was translated into Japanese by Kōtatsu Fujita, (Bombun Muryōjūkyō Shiyaku 梵文無量壽經試訳) Kyoto: Higashi Hongwanji Shuppanbu, July 1972. 3+139+15 pp. Translated into Japanese by Yutaka Iwamoto. Kyoto: the author, 1968. Later Professor Fujita went to Nepal to get access to extant manuscripts of Pure Land Scriptures, and basing himself upon his own investigations he made some emendations on former editions, and published a new Japanese translation of the Larger and Smaller Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtras. (Kōtatsu Fujita: Bombun Wayaku Muryōjūkyō. Amidakyō. Kyoto: Hōzōkan, 1975)

The Three Pure Land Sūtras were translated from the originals into Japanese by Susumu Yamaguchi, Hajime Sakurabe, and Mikisaburō Mori. (Daijō Butten, No. 6. Tokyo: Chūō Kōronsha, 1976.)

Various Chinese versions were discussed in B. Shiio: Kyōten, p. 271 f. Shunei Tsuboi: Jōdo Sanbūkyō Gaisetsu (淨土三部經概説 Outline of the Three Pure Land Sūtras). In order to bring this teaching home to the common people, the sūtras relate that other Buddhas in the ten directions are glorifying this Buddha.<sup>27</sup>

The Smaller Pure Land Sūtra<sup>28</sup> must be the oldest one.<sup>29</sup> Being short, it has few clues to the date of its compilation, but probably it must have been written at a very early time.

R. Mano asserts that the prototype of the Smaller Sukhāvati-vyūha originated around the same time as the Larger Sukhāvati-vyūha and prior to the Pratyutpanna-samādhi-sūtra which originated before the 道行經 (translated into Chinese in the second century); and that one is led to the conclusion that the prototype of the Smaller Sukhāvati-vyūha was composed around the first century B. C.<sup>30</sup>

The Tibetan version of the Smaller Sukhāvativyūha-sūtra is not necessarily a literal translation of the Sanskrit original. It was influenced by the thought and experience of the Tibetans.<sup>31</sup> One Chinese version which was mostly resorted to in China and Japan is called the Amida Sūtra. It teaches that anyone who merely hears the name of Amitāyus and thinks of it at the hour of death will be received by Amitābha to be born in the "blessed land", and that faith in that Buddha should be cherished.<sup>32</sup> Whether the practice of reciting the name of Amitābha existed or not is not clear, although the practice of reciting the name in general had existed already in Early Buddhism.<sup>33</sup> It was believed that the thought of those who are going to pass away and to be received by Amitābha at the death-bed is not disturbed.<sup>34</sup>

As the causes for the birth in the Pure Land the Bodhi-mind, hearing of the name of Amitābha Buddha, directing one's thought toward Amitābha and planting roots of goodness<sup>35</sup> are mentioned in the Sukhāvativyūha-sūtras.<sup>36</sup> Throughout all Pure Land Scriptures of India, meditation upon Amitābha Buddha (Buddhānusmṛti)<sup>37</sup> was the essential practice. However, Shan-tao of China interpreted it as meaning 'invocation to him by repeating his name'. Since then, this interpretation has been subscribed to by most Chinese and Japanese Pure Land Buddhists.<sup>38</sup> The all-embracing, compassionate character of Amitābha was most appealing to Northern Buddhists. He is said to have made 48 vows to save living beings from sufferings, when he was a monk called Dharmākara<sup>39</sup> in the past lives. However the so-called Eighteenth<sup>40</sup> vow has been most esteemed by the Shinshū sect of Japan.

There is no doubt that the Larger Sukhāvativyūha-sūtra (無量壽經) was in existence before 200 A. D.<sup>41</sup> It is presumed that this sūtra was compiled in the age of the Kuṣāṇa Dynasty, i. e., the first and second centuries A. D., by an order of the Mahīśāsaka bhikṣus, which flourished in the Gandhāra region.<sup>42</sup> It is likely that the Larger Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra owed greatly to the Lokottaravādins for its compilation. In the Sūtra there can be found many elements in common with the Mahāvastu.<sup>43</sup> The Larger Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra was composed after the pattern of avādana.<sup>44</sup>

It is likely that the original of the Larger Sukhāvati-vyūha brought to China by Saṅghavarman may have been written in Gāndhārī or any other Prakrit similar to it.<sup>45</sup> The Chinese translation of the Larger Sukhāvativyūha-sūtra by Saṅghavarman evidences some traits of Gāndhārī and the fact that Kharoṣṭhī manuscripts existed in China in that period will also support this supposition.<sup>46</sup>

(IBK., vol. 4, No. 1, p. 48 f.).

<sup>45</sup> For example, Kauṇḍinya in the Sanskrit original was translated as 了本際. The original ran as kodīṇa, and Saṅghavarman took it for koṭijña, whereas it is likely that the scribe of the existing Sanskrit manuscript derived other words as follows: kodīṇa→komdiṇṇa→Kauṇḍinya. The Chinese version of this sūtra now read most frequently is generally considered to have been done by Saṅghavarman, but it is likely that the real translator was Sangharakṣa (竺法護).<sup>47</sup> Of the several versions of this sūtra, the one by Bodhiruci (菩提流志) represents the latest pattern.<sup>48</sup> There are tremendous discrepancies between the Sanskrit original and the Chinese versions. It is supposed by some scholars that a lot of passages were inserted by translators in the Chinese versions.<sup>49</sup> For example, some scholars believe that the passage of the Five Evils (五惡段) was added in China,<sup>50</sup> whereas others reject this supposition.<sup>51</sup> At any rate the several versions are different from each other to a fairly large extent.<sup>52</sup>

無量壽莊嚴經 is the newest form of translating the Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra, representing an abridgment and modification of 康僧鎧's 無量壽經 and 無量壽如來會 of the 大宝積經.<sup>53</sup>

The 無量壽莊嚴經, another later Chinese version of the Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra translated by Fa-hsien (法賢) is somewhat influenced by Esoteric Buddhism, being mingled with the ideas of altruism and universal salvation.<sup>54</sup>

The Tibetan versions of the Smaller and Larger Sukhāvativyūha-sūtras were influenced and twisted by traditional ways of thinking of Tibetans and the topological conditions of Tibet.<sup>55</sup>

The sūtra teaches as follows:.....In the past life many aeons ago Amitābha was a monk called Dharmākara. He made vows<sup>56</sup> to save all suffering beings so that there would be no suffering living beings when he attained Enlightenment. Now that he has attained Enlightenment and has become Amitābha, anyone who keeps his name will be certainly saved by him to be born in the Pure Land(Sukhāvati).

The original concept of faith in Pure Land Sūtras was not a devotional one (bhakti),<sup>57</sup> but faith in teachings (śraddhā),<sup>58</sup> which is highly different from faith taught by later Chinese and Japanese Pure Land Buddhists.<sup>59</sup> It is the pure and tranquil state of mind (prasāda) that is emphasized in Pure Land Sūtras.<sup>60</sup>

The descriptions of Pure Land in Pure Land sūtras were greatly influenced by Brahmin and Hindu ideas and the topological situation of India.<sup>61</sup> There was a process of the development of lotus (padma)-symbolism in Pure Land Buddhism. The final outcome of the thought was as follows: The aspirants of faith and assiduity are born transformed (auṣapāduka) in the lotus-flowers. But those with doubt are born into the lotus-buds. They stay in the calyx of a lotus (garbhāvāsa) for five hundred years without seeing or hearing the Three Treasures. Within the closed lotus-flowers they enjoy pleasures as though they were playing in a garden or a palace. Here the two modes of birth for two kinds of aspirants are equally presented through lotus (padma)-symbolism.<sup>62</sup> Women are born there as men.<sup>63</sup> There lives no woman, although there live fairies (apsaras) of elegant and superb form.

Anyhow, it is likely that Pure Land Buddhism inherited and developed the layistic tendency of early Buddhism.<sup>64</sup>

Now time has elapsed. How should contemporary Pure Land Buddhists interpret Pure Land? Why is it that Pure Land Buddhism is not welcomed by the West? Such problems are discussed nowadays.<sup>65</sup>

The worship of Samantabhadra was introduced into the Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra,<sup>66</sup> as well as that of Avalokiteśvara and Sthāmaprāpta.

Discussions on morality are set forth especially in the portions of the sūtra which are included in some Chinese versions alone.<sup>67</sup>

The Amitāyur-buddha-dhyāna-sūtra (觀無量壽經) is an exponent of thoughts more advanced in a sense than those found in any version of the Sukhāvativyūha-sūtras.<sup>68</sup> It deals less with the description of the blessed land, but devotes more space to the exhortation of meditations (dhyāna)<sup>69</sup> on Amitāyus, by means of which one may reach that land. There is a translation of this sūtra in the Uigrian language. There remain many sūtras in which meditation on the figure of the Buddha is explained; many of the translators of these sūtras were the men who had come to China from Central India. Most probably these sūtras were produced at the end of the fourth century. They relate many stories of the hells. Corresponding to this fact, paintings of the conditions of the hells have been discovered in a large number in Central Asia.<sup>70</sup> Against the theory that the Amitāyurdhyāna-sūtra was composed in either Central Asia or China, it is asserted that the contemplation on the place acquired by the merits of pure acts (清淨業処觀) derived from the traditional attitude of contemplation in India.<sup>71</sup> This sūtra was explained by Shan-tao,<sup>72</sup> the Chinese monk, as setting forth the teachings under the authority of Śākyamuni.<sup>73</sup>

There are some invocations<sup>74</sup> to Amitābha Buddha. The Amitāyurjñāna-hṛdaya-dhāraṇī,<sup>75</sup> the "Dhāraṇī for uprooting all the obstacles of Karma and for Causing One to be Born in the Pure Land,"<sup>76</sup> and so on<sup>77</sup> belong to the same class as invocations to be reborn in the Pure Land.

The Aparimitāyurjñāna-sūtra exists in the Sanskrit original and its Tibetan and Chinese versions.<sup>78</sup>

Magical character of Amitābha worship was especially enhanced in China.<sup>79</sup> The practice of Buddhānusmṛti,<sup>80</sup> which originally meant 'meditation on Buddha', was transformed after Shan-tao to that of invocation by mouth, because of the trend among the Chinese to esteem magical power.<sup>81</sup>

The idea of Pure Land also had various unclear points, and it caused a controversy<sup>83</sup> in later days whether Pure Land is a Reward Land<sup>84</sup> or a Transformation Land.<sup>85</sup>

16.H.ii. The Ratnakūṭa-sūtra

The core of the Mahāratnakūṭa-dharmaparyāya-śatasāhasrikā-grantha<sup>1</sup> ("The Heap of Jewels Sūtra") was originally the 43rd part, i. e. Kāśyapa-parivarta (the 普明菩薩会 meeting).<sup>2</sup> At the time of Nāgārjuna both the Kāśyapa-parivarta and the 45th part (Akṣayamati-sūtra 無尽意菩薩会) were already in existence.<sup>3</sup> As its original prototype was in Prakrit, the sūtra was in vogue in the third—fifth centuries. The Sanskrit edition, published by Staël-Holstein,<sup>4</sup> came into being later. Its prototype was called Ratnakūṭa or Kāśyapa-paripṛcchā.<sup>5</sup> According to the Kāśyapa-parivarta, a person can be called a Bodhisattva who accomplishes the thirty-two characteristics.<sup>6</sup> Examining it from the angle of botanical geography one finds that the Kāśyapa-parivarta came into existence in West India in the third-fifth centuries, the first part, Trisamvara-nirdeśa-parivarta (三律儀会) in a region somewhat west of Bihar and Orissa in the fifth—seventh centuries and the 32nd part, Aśokadatta-vyākaraṇa (無畏德菩薩会) in Khotan.<sup>7</sup> The Ratnarāsi-sūtra (宝梁經), the 45th section of the Ratnakūṭa-sūtra is a development of the Kāśyapa-parivarta.<sup>8</sup> At any rate it was after the fifth century that the bulky Mahāratnakūṭa-dharma-pāryāya-śatasāhasrikā-grantha was completed in the form that we now have.<sup>9</sup>

Among the numerous Questions (Paripṛcchās) which are included in the Chinese and the Tibetan Ratnakūṭa, there is also the Rāṣṭrapālaparipṛcchā or Rāṣṭrapāla-sūtra.<sup>10</sup> The Chinese

16.I. The Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra and Others

After the Mahāparinibbāna-suttanta in Pali and its corresponding four Chinese versions, the six volume work of the Mahāparinirvāṇasūtra (大般涅槃經), translated by Fa-hien (法顯) into Chinese, came into existence in the latest period.<sup>1</sup> It must have been compiled in the period 200–400 A. D. The postscript to the “Wandering Sūtra” (遊行經) was added some time between 300 and 400 A. D.<sup>2</sup> Quite recently fragments of a Sanskrit version of the sūtra were discovered in Central Asia and published.<sup>3</sup> There are two Chinese versions of a Mahāyāna sūtra of the same title<sup>4</sup> and its Sanskrit fragments also were discovered.<sup>5</sup> The sūtra seems to have been produced some time after Nāgārjuna and before Vasubandhu,<sup>6</sup> probably about 300–350 A. D.<sup>7</sup> An opinion has it that it saw light in the period 200–300 A. D., the place of production being Kāśmir.<sup>8</sup>

In the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra,<sup>9</sup> i. e. “the Sūtra of Great Decease (of the Buddha)”, Śākya-muni is quoted as having said: “Seven Hundred years after my nirvāṇa the devil Māra Pāpiyas will gradually destroy my Truthful Law”.<sup>10</sup> In fact this sūtra contains here and there passages describing the deterioration and persecution of Buddhism. As far as examination of existing archaeological findings goes, inscriptions written in Kharoṣṭhī characters are confined to those concerned with Buddhism. Most of those written in Brāhmī characters before the Gupta Dynasty are also related with Buddhism. But, along with the founding of the Gupta Dynasty, the state of things so changed that nearly all the temples newly built were Hindu, those of Buddhism being exceptions.<sup>11</sup> In fact, Buddhism was so ignored that Buddhist temples were pulled down and building materials obtained thereby were used for the erection of Hindu temples. This fact justifies one to conclude that the sūtras in which references are made to the downfall of Buddhism were written at the time of the Gupta Dynasty (320–500 A. D.) or some time after it. This is confirmed by the above-quoted prediction of Śākyamuni. With regard to the time of the death of Buddha, all legends conveyed in the Northern traditions agree in saying that King Aśoka appeared about one hundred years after the death of the Buddha. If this is accepted as true, the time of the death of Buddha was, as Dr. Ui has surmised, 386 B. C.<sup>12</sup> According to the estimation of the author, the death-year must be 383 B. C., because of a slight modification in Dr. Ui's researches.<sup>13</sup> As it is certain that the writer of the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra was cognizant of the legends, "700 years after my nirvāṇa" corresponds to the time of the beginning of the Gupta Dynasty.

The process of formation of the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra of Mahāyāna seems to have been as follows:<sup>14</sup>

- 1) First the Sanskrit original of the six-volume recension was composed in India before the formation of the tathāgatagarbha thought as in the Ratnagotravibhāga etc.
- 2) The formation of the Tathāgatagarbha thought.
- 3) The formation of the latter portion of the sūtra, corresponding to the latter thirty volumes.

The consciousness of crisis of the Buddhist order was very strong in this sūtra and in other sūtras relevant to it,<sup>15</sup> and was probably due to Hindu revival and the persecution of the Buddhist order by the Hindus.

This sūtra was once very influential in ancient China, and provoked controversy among Buddhist thinkers.<sup>16</sup>

The Mahā-parinirvāṇa-sūtra<sup>17</sup> claims to be the last sermon before the passing away of the Buddha, saying that it reveals the secret teaching which had not been preached before (i. e., in other sūtras).<sup>18</sup> Formerly, Buddhism, advocating the theory of Non-ego, was against the theory of ātman, but here in this scripture the Buddha teaches the theory of the Great Ātman.<sup>19</sup> It was shocking to the Buddhists of that time, but the origin can be traced to ancient times.<sup>20</sup> The Cosmic Body<sup>21</sup> of the Buddha is eternal. Every human being is endowed with Buddhahood.<sup>22</sup> A precursor of the concept of Buddhahood can be noticed even in the Abhidharma-Mahāvibhāṣā-śāstra.<sup>23</sup> But here the concept was developed more extensively. It is likely that the Mahāparinirvāṇasūtra of Mahāyāna was greatly influenced by the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra.<sup>24</sup>

This text is a synthesis of various thoughts. According to the teaching of this sūtra, the condemned men (icchantikas) are evil by nature and yet their Buddhahood can be realized by practice.<sup>25</sup> Its own Disciplines are ruled in this sūtra.<sup>26</sup> The Disciplines of the bodhisattva are called 'the Five Kinds of Practice' (五行), i. e. 1) the Noble Practice (聖行), i. e. keeping of precepts, practising meditation, and developing wisdom; 2) the Pure Practice (梵行), i. e. compassionate deeds for the sake of living beings; 3) the Practice by Heavenly Reason (天行), i. e. spontaneous superb acts for the sake of others; 4) the Compassionate Deeds as if for Babies (嬰兒行), i. e. the practice of secular good deeds, and 5) the Practice of Sickness (病行), i. e. the deeds of sharing sufferings with those who need help. Having practised these, one should enter into the Practice of Buddha (Tathāgata-caryā), which is formless (無相) and actionless (無作). (The Southern Recension, vol. 11. Taisho, vol. XII, p. 673 b.) The Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra of Mahāyāna was critical of the disciplines of Hīnayāna.<sup>27</sup> In the earlier part of the Mahāparinirvāṇasūtra giving (dāna) to the order of monks and nuns is encouraged, whereas in the latter part giving to people in general also was exhorted.<sup>28</sup>

The Buddhist order represented in the former part of the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra consisted of homeless monks and nuns as in Conservative Buddhism, whereas in the latter half of the sūtra the order included laymen also and the significance of faith was emphasized as a combining force of the order; punishment (including execution) of those who slander Mahāyāna is enjoined, which was an exceptional case in the history of Buddhism.<sup>29</sup> was much esteemed among Zen Buddhists of China and Japan. Some scholars hold the opinion that it is mere excerpts from the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra,<sup>36</sup> whereas others hold the opinion that it is excerpts from the chapter Mahāparinirvāṇa of the Buddhacarita.<sup>37</sup> In any case, it has a close relation to the last scene of the Buddha in the above-mentioned works and 仏本行集經.<sup>38</sup> It seems to have been composed after Āśvaghōṣa. Another sūtra (略教誡經),<sup>39</sup> being similar to the Sūtra of the Teachings Left by the Buddha in content, teaches the proper mental attitude of monks (bhikṣus).

Another well-known anthology of words of the Buddha is the “Forty-two Section Sūtra” (四十二章經).<sup>40</sup> The contents of this sūtra were taken mostly from the scriptures of early Buddhism. This scripture was greatly elaborated on in China.<sup>41</sup> Finally, this sūtra became very popular in China and Japan.

The texts of the Mahā-parinirvāṇa-sūtra can be used as a sort of chronological standard, by which the dates of other sūtras can be determined.<sup>42</sup> The Mahākaruṇā-puṇḍarika-sūtra (大悲華經)<sup>43</sup> came into existence before<sup>44</sup> the appearance of the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra of Mahāyāna, as did the Caturdāraka-samādhi-sūtra (方等般泥洹經)<sup>45</sup> and 四童子三昧經.<sup>46</sup> In the Karuṇā-puṇḍarika-sūtra Original Vows of various Buddhas including Amitāyus are set forth. These Vows are advanced further along the line of Mahāyāna than those in other sūtras.<sup>47</sup>

16. J. The Mahāsamnipāta-sūtra and Others

The age in which the Mahāvaiṣṭya-mahāsamnipāta-sūtra (i. e. "the Great Collection Sūtra")<sup>1</sup> came into existence more or less varies according to its different chapters, but it was believed by a scholar that it was between the time of Nāgārjuna and that of the production of the Mahāyāna-śraddhotpāda-śāstra, namely, about 200-300 A. D.<sup>2</sup> But the date ad quem of the sūtra must be much later. That is to say, the total sūtra in its present form must have been completed in a later period.

In other words, it was not completed as a whole at the time of Dharmarakṣa (竺法護) or c. 250, but the individual sūtras making it up existed separately. Before Nāgārjuna there existed a scripture called the Ratna-kūta-sūtra (?), which had a close relationship to this sūtra.<sup>3</sup> Some scholars hold that these were collected and made into one at the time of Dharmarakṣa or c. 400,<sup>4</sup> whereas others hold that the Mahāsamnipāta-sūtra came out as a complete book after the fifth century.<sup>5</sup> Speaking of its parts, the chapter "Protection of Stūpas" (護塔品) was produced in Kashgar,<sup>6</sup> as was the latter half of the Sūryagarbha (日藏經).<sup>7</sup> The original prototype of the Candragarbha (月藏經) seems to have come into being in India in the middle of the second century,<sup>8</sup> while it was produced in its present form in Khotan in the fourth century. The concluding portion of the sūtra pays greater respect to Central Asia and China than to India as sacred regions having close affinity with Buddhism.<sup>9</sup> The Candragarbha was produced consecutively to the Sūryagarbha.<sup>10</sup> As the Chinese version of the Candragarbha mentions the Twelve Divine Stars (十二宮) of Western Asia and the Five Elements (五行) of Chinese thought, it must have been edited by someone, probably Narendrayāśas, who was well versed in astronomy and geography of Central Asia and China.<sup>11</sup> The Bhadrapāla section was discussed before.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>7</sup> R. Hadani, SK., XI, 5, p. 6 f.; The Sūryagarbha seems to have been edited and modified by Narendrayāśas (那連提耶會) who was well versed in astronomy and geography of Central Asia and China, for it had adopted the conception of 12 signs of zodiac (十二宮) which is of Western origin and the Chinese conception of 五行. (Zenba, IBK., IV, 1, p. 25 f.)

<sup>8</sup> 大集月藏經, making up the 46th through 56 volumes of the 大集經 was tr. by Narendrayāśas. This was translated into Japanese by Keiki Yabuki and Shōshin Narita in KIK., Daijūbu, vol. 4. There exists an Old Khotanese text of the Candragarbha. (Monumenta Serindica, vol. 4, Appendix, p. 355.)

There prevailed a pessimistic belief among laymen Buddhists that the True Religion of the Buddha would last only for 1000 years, and then vanish.<sup>13</sup> The critical sentiment<sup>14</sup> in this sūtra seems to have originated because of the social tumults caused by the invasion of the Ephtals in the sixth century.<sup>15</sup> The Lien-hua-mien-ching (蓮華面經) was believed to have been produced, probably in Kaśmir,<sup>16</sup> in the first half of the sixth century.<sup>17</sup> According to Prof. R. Yamada,<sup>18</sup> the legend of this sūtra is based upon the invasion by the Huns (Hūna) and the destructive conquest by Mihirakula (502–542). This sūtra was translated into Chinese in 584 A. D. So we are brought to the conclusion that it came into existence some time between 542–584 A. D.

Belief in Kṣitigarbha originated in the old belief in Mother Goddess of Earth (prthivi). Helped by the idea of Angels Srosh of Zoroastrianism, the religion of the Iranian people, who had immigrated to the southern region of the Tarym basin in the fourth century, the deity came to be worshipped as an independent bodhisattva. His worship was adopted into Manichaeism in China. There are many sūtras extolling him.<sup>19</sup> Kṣitigarbha is always represented in the figure of a monk, and he has other characteristics also.<sup>20</sup>

The Daśacakra-kṣitigarbha-sūtra (大乘大集地藏十輪經)<sup>21</sup> was compiled by Buddhist priests who spoke Iranian languages, while the Kṣiti-garbha-praṇidhāna-sūtra (地藏菩薩本願經)<sup>22</sup> in two volumes in the Chinese version was probably written in Khotan.<sup>23</sup> Another view disagrees with this view, holding it as doubtful, but says that the sūtra as it exists today was produced by enlarging and supplementing the Kṣitigarbha-praṇidhāna-sūtra by Chinese monks, in imitation of the Previous Vows (pūrvapraṇidhānas) of Amitābha Buddha.<sup>24</sup> The 百千頌大集經地藏菩薩請問法身讚<sup>25</sup> is a collection of hymns in praise of Kṣitigarbha in 129 verses. In the 地藏菩薩陀羅尼經<sup>26</sup> the vows of Kṣitigarbha and his dhāraṇi are set forth. The 地藏菩薩儀軌<sup>27</sup> is a work describing rules of rituals for the worship of Kṣitigarbha. The 地藏菩薩發心因緣十王經<sup>28</sup> seems to have been composed at the end of the Five Dynasties of China. The 延命地藏菩薩經<sup>29</sup> was composed in Japan, for it refers to long-nosed goblins (天狗) of Japan.

The Ākāśagarbha-sūtra (虚空孕菩薩經), in which the virtues of Ākāśagarbha-bodhisattva (虚空藏菩薩) and the benefit the bodhisattva bestows on believers are explained, seems to have been written by Iranian Buddhists in Kashgar under the influence of the idea of Amitābha.<sup>30</sup> At any rate, the Mahāsaṃnipāta-sūtra as a whole had passed through fairly complicated modifications and processes before it took its present form.<sup>31</sup>

With the decline of Buddhism on the one hand, and Hindu revival on the other, Buddhists had to make a concession to the intellectual change in the society. "The Sūtras of the Verses of a Hundred Comparisons by Prasenajit for Converting the World"<sup>34</sup> (勝軍化世百喻伽他經), translated into Chinese by 天息災, is a collection of verses expressing one's own reflection upon human nature. It says that this was composed after the manner of Vyāsa the poet, and does not use technical terms of Buddhism. The Vajrasūci is another example of this trend, cf. infra.<sup>35</sup>

16.K. Discipline Sūtras<sup>1</sup>

Mahāyāna ethics was most explicitly set forth in Discipline Sūtras.

The structure of traditional Buddhist order as it was established in Conservative Buddhism was also inherited by Mahāyāna. When Hsuan-tsang went to India for pilgrimage, there were some monks who were called Mahāyāna-sthaviras. They may have been somewhat relevant to Vetulya-vāda.<sup>2</sup> In some Mahāyāna sūtras Buddhist ethical practices to be observed by monks and nuns, laymen and lay women were described.<sup>3</sup> The practice of the Ten Virtues was encouraged.<sup>4</sup> The Ten Good Virtues (daśa kuśala-silāni) was a central discipline code for some Mahāyānists.<sup>5</sup> Monks were taught to be aware of their own actions. The brief "Defilement Sūtra",<sup>6</sup> one of the early scriptures, teaches monks to avoid being seduced by outer things.

The core of Mahāyāna ethics was altruistic. The Buddha sets up the four vows<sup>7</sup> for men.<sup>8</sup> Bodhisattvas made various vows to save living beings.<sup>9</sup>

The fundamental virtues for the practice of Mahāyāna were the Six Perfections (para-mitās). The "Bodhisattvas' Internal Vow Sūtra" (菩薩內戒經<sup>10</sup>) expounds the Six Perfections and the practice of them in the Ten Stages (十住). This text is an enlargement of the "Bodhisattvas' Internal Practice of the Six Perfections Sūtra" (菩薩內習六波羅蜜經). Later the Perfection of Expediency (upāya) was added to these six, herewith making seven and finally the set of the Ten Perfections was fixed.<sup>11</sup>

Among the various virtues, the selfless deed of Giving (i. e., rendering help to others) was stressed most. It is derived from the fundamental conception of Buddhism. The Ārya-saṃgīti-gāthā-sataka<sup>12</sup> is a collection of hundred verses extolling offering (dāna). The supreme wisdom of the Buddha is transformed into his Great Compassion.<sup>13</sup> To turn one's own merits to others (pariṇāmanā) was encouraged.<sup>14</sup> Vicarious atonement was extolled.<sup>15</sup> The rite of repentance was practiced by Mahāyānists also.<sup>16</sup>

The ideological foundation of Mahāyāna is basically Voidness. One sūtra (諸法無行經)<sup>17</sup> establishes the theoretical basis of the Mahāyāna order, and was highly esteemed by St. Dengyō of Japan. The "Buddha Treasury Sūtra" (仏藏經)<sup>18</sup> and the "Enlightenment-Mind Sūtra" (出生菩提心經)<sup>19</sup> and the Dharmavinayasamādhi-sūtra<sup>20</sup> set forth Mahāyāna Disciplines or practice.

In the Kuśala-mūlasaṃgraha-sūtra<sup>21</sup> the tremendous scene of the coming of many monks and Bodhisattvas and the practice of Bodhisattvas are set forth. This text must have been composed prior to Nāgārjuna, for it is cited in his Mahāprajñāpāramitā-upadeśa. In the Ratnameghasūtra,<sup>22</sup> composed in the third or fourth century A. D., various ways of practice are discussed. The Tathāgata-guhyakośa-sūtra<sup>23</sup> also expounds Buddhist ethics. The "Sūtra on the Forbidding Precepts of the Kāśyapiyas"<sup>24</sup> sets forth Mahāyāna precepts.

Mahāyāna laid emphasis on disciplines for both clergy and laity. A number of works for disciplines were composed, although Mahāyāna Disciplines were of gradual growth. The Bodhisattvapratimokṣasūtra<sup>25</sup> sets forth the Vinaya of Bodhisattvas. This sūtra is identical with Vinayaviniścaya Upāliparipṛcchā.<sup>26</sup> The Precepts in the Śrīmālādevī Sūtra were well-known in China and Japan.<sup>27</sup> The most famous and controversial one was the Brahmajāla-sūtra (梵網經).<sup>28</sup> This text was greatly esteemed in China,<sup>29</sup> and became the fundamental text for the concept of Discipline (Vinaya) in Japanese Buddhism. Though a view is held that the Brahmajāla-sūtra of Mahāyāna was produced in China, about 350 it was in existence as commandments of Mahāyāna.<sup>30</sup> It is supposed to have come into existence later than the Mahāparinirvāṇa-sūtra.<sup>31</sup> One scholar went even so far as to say that this sūtra is nothing but an excerpt from the latter.<sup>32</sup>

Mahāyāna ethics tended to be more elastic and flexible according to the environments, compared with the ethics of Conservative Buddhism. In the Lokānuvartana-sūtra<sup>33</sup> it is taught that Buddha, transcending the mundane world himself, complies with the practices of men in each environment. The 菩薩瓔珞本業經<sup>34</sup> is a Discipline sūtra describing the practice of bodhisattvas in the 45 stages (十住・十行・十廻向・十地・等覺・妙覺). Some scholars assert that this text was composed in China, later than the Brahmajāla-sūtra and the Jen-wang (仁王) Prajñāpāramitāsūtra.<sup>35</sup> In the Buddhabhūmi-sūtra<sup>36</sup> the Ten Stages (bhūmi) for aspirants are discussed.

The consciousness of Mahāyāna Discipline was very strong among Mahāyānists. The 清淨毘尼方廣經<sup>37</sup> makes a clear distinction between the śrāvaka and bodhisattva Vinayas. The 大乘戒經<sup>38</sup> propounds the necessity of observing the Mahāyāna disciplines. In a sūtra (文殊師利淨律經)<sup>39</sup> Mañjuśrī sets forth the Mahāyāna Vinaya in contrast to the Hīnayāna one.

Teacher-disciple relationship was emphasized among Mahāyānists, just as among Hindus. The 善恭敬經<sup>40</sup> sets forth one's obligation to the teaching (dharma) and teachers. The 菩薩戒羯磨文<sup>41</sup> is an extract by Hsuan-tsang out of the Yogācārabhūmi to confer the bodhisattva-vinaya on aspirants.

composed in China, being based upon the Chinese version of the Bodhisattva-bhūmi (菩薩地持經).<sup>43</sup>

The Bodhisattvaśīlasamvara in the Yogācāra-bhūmi was not very strict and restrictive.<sup>44</sup>

There is a version of 授菩薩戒儀 traditionally said to have been conveyed by Bodhidharma. Another version of it was found in Tung-huan.<sup>45</sup> The "Ritual of the Eight Abstinenances" (受八齋戒儀), found in Central Asia, seems to be a combination of Eight Abstinenances and that of the Brahmajāla-sūtra.<sup>46</sup>

Repentence of sins was enjoined. In the "Śāriputra's Repentence Sūtra" (舍利弗悔過經<sup>47</sup>) the Buddha teaches the observance of repentence to Śāriputra. In the 大乘三聚懺悔經<sup>48</sup> it is taught that delight with others, admonition, and turning merits come out of repentence. The obstacles of karma can be dissolved owing to the insight that all things are originally pure, according to the 淨業障經.<sup>49</sup> In Mahāyāna it was thought that bondage by karman (karmāvaraṇa) can be destroyed by either repentence, meditation or repetition of magical formulās.<sup>50</sup>

Discipline works intended for laymen alone were discussed before. However, laymen Buddhism was not fully admitted by all Mahāyānists. There still prevailed a very strong tendency against it. The 大乘本生心地觀經<sup>51</sup> emphasizes ascetic life of Buddhism against laymen Buddhism. (This text is considerably influenced by the viññānavāda. It is likely that there are many interpolations by Chinese in this text.<sup>52</sup>)

Mahāyāna teachers encouraged their followers to do various practices. Meritorious deeds in general were enumerated in a sūtra (諸德福田經).<sup>53</sup> Circumambulation around stūpas was extolled (in the 右繞仏塔功德經).<sup>54</sup> To offer lamps to stūpas and caityas was regarded as meritorious (in the 施燈功德經).<sup>55</sup> The worship of both stūpas and Buddhas were encouraged (in the 未曾有經).<sup>56</sup> In correspondence with the fact that the statues of Buddhas and Bodhisattvas came to be made in Gandhāra and Mathurā, the merits of making them were greatly extolled, and sūtras to the effect<sup>57</sup> were written. The rite of pouring water on Buddha statues was regulated in a sūtra (浴像功德經).<sup>58</sup> One sūtra (灌洗仏形像經)<sup>59</sup> enjoins to pour water on them especially on April 8, which date must have been mentioned being translated into the Chinese calendar of that time. The rosary was originally used by Brahmins, but later it was adopted by Mahāyānists. Mañjuśrī extolls the merits of using rosaries in a sūtra (校量数珠功德經).<sup>60</sup>

One sūtra (温室洗浴衆僧經)<sup>61</sup> enumerates the merits of monks taking baths in warm bathrooms. As this is against the custom in India where people generally take cold baths alone, the climate being very hot, it is likely that this text was composed somewhere in Northern areas.

Early Buddhist monks and even Mahāyāna monks in general did not officiate funerals. This practice was supposed to be up to Brahmins. However, with the lapse of time, some Mahāyāna monks came to practise them. One sūtra (無常經),<sup>62</sup> teaching non-permanence of things, enjoins funerals. It was intended to have monks recite this sūtra at funerals. Later in Japan, funerals came to be the main concern of Buddhist priests.

16.L. Laymen Buddhism

Viewed from the standpoint of the philosophy of 'Voidness', ('Emptiness') there is no discrimination between mundane existence and deliverance. If one should think there were distinction, it would be wrong. Human desires should be tolerated.<sup>1</sup> This thought led to the conclusion in practice that the essence of religion should be sought for, not in the life of recluses, but in the lay life of householders. Laymen Buddhism, consequently, came to be advocated.<sup>2</sup>

The Ugradatta-paripṛcchā, an early Discipline Sūtra composed before Nāgārjuna, sets forth the five conditions for a layman to practise the way of Mahāyāna.<sup>3</sup>

The most representative sūtra of this trend is the Vimalakīrtinirdeśa-sūtra ("Spotless Fame Sūtra"). In this text a pious layman called Vimalakīrti ("Spotless Fame") gives a sermon to monks, contrary to the ordinary manner, denouncing the homeless life of asceticism.<sup>4</sup>

The Vimalakīrtinirdeśa-sūtra<sup>5</sup> i. e. "the Sūtra on the Sermon by 'Spotless Fame,' the Layman" was already existent as early as prior to 200 or 150 A. D.<sup>6</sup> Fragmentary passages of this sūtra in Sanskrit are found in later Buddhist treatises.<sup>7</sup> and those in the North Aryan language

Translated from the Tibetan into Japanese by Gadjin Nagao (Daijō Butten, No. 7. Chūō Kōronsha, 1974). Various similes in the Vimalakīrtinirdeśa were discussed by Jisshū Ōga, Kanakura Comm. Vol. 391-405.

have also been discovered.<sup>8</sup> Its Chinese version was recited in Central Asia.<sup>9</sup> The dialectical concept of non-duality (advaya)<sup>10</sup> and the idea of Buddha Nature (buddhagotra)<sup>11</sup> were leading ones in this sūtra. The final state is called the 'Wonderful Deliverance' (acintya-mokṣa).<sup>12</sup> The thought of discipline founded on the principle of 'Voidness' exerted influence in many later sūtras.<sup>13</sup> There are many artistic works based on this sūtra and other scriptures in various countries of Asia.<sup>14</sup>

Kumārajīva did not translate the Vimalakīrtinirdeśa-sūtra faithfully to the Sanskrit original, but it is likely that he made twisted interpretations in some passages in the purport of this-worldliness, admittance of human desires, emphasis on social duty, etc. He used even the term 'filial piety'.

Kumārajīva's version<sup>15</sup> is more conspicuous in representing this-worldliness, emphasis on ethical behavior, the attitude of admitting human desires and feelings etc. than other versions. All Chinese versions advocate filial piety, which seems to have been lacking in the original text of this sūtra.<sup>16</sup> On the other hand, Hsuan-tsang's version is too literal to the original, diffusive in style and weak in impressiveness.<sup>17</sup>

This sūtra was studied and lectured on very often in ancient China and Japan.<sup>18</sup> It represents an excellent way of counseling which is meaningful even for modern man.<sup>19</sup>

The 'Spotless Fame' Sūtra had followers. In the Mahāvaiṣṭyāyāmūrdharāja-sūtra,<sup>20</sup> which is a continuation of the 'Spotless Fame Sūtra', a son of 'Spotless Fame' is highly extolled. This text came into existence in the 2nd or most probably 3rd century A. D. In the Candrottārā-dārikā-vyākaraṇa-sūtra<sup>21</sup> a daughter of 'Spotless Fame' is the central figure. She propounds Buddhist thought, which is approved by the Buddha. In one sūtra (大莊嚴法門經)<sup>22</sup> the central figure is a prostitute (called 勝金色光明德), who teaches the doctrine of Buddhism. She edifies her lover at a rendezvous in a forest. Another sūtra (called 諸要集經)<sup>23</sup> has some passages which remind us of the stories in the "Spotless Fame Sūtra".

The Śrīmālā-devi-siṃhanāda-sūtra<sup>24</sup> is a sermon delivered by a queen, a lay woman, and it was sanctioned by the Buddha. The text exists in Tibetan<sup>25</sup> and Chinese. The Sanskrit original is lost, but fragments of it are preserved as citations in other works.<sup>26</sup> This sūtra became very important in Chinese and Japanese Buddhism.<sup>27</sup> In the Sumati-dārikā-paripṛcchā<sup>28</sup> the eight year old girl Sumati delivers a sermon. This also may be regarded as a sort of laymen Buddhism.

However, in Mahāyāna, generally speaking, women were regarded as inferior to men, probably due to their mental weakness, their physiological afflictions and the inequality of their social rank to that of men.<sup>29</sup>

The 淨度三昧經, the Sanskrit text of which was found at Tun-huang, and which teaches Buddhist ethics, seems to have been made in China.<sup>35</sup>

Another sūtra (賓頭盧突羅闍為優陀延法說法經 anonymous, tr. by Guṇabhadra in between 435–443 A. D.) sets forth a sermon of Piṇḍolabharadvāja to King Udāyin about the evils involved in sensual enjoyments.<sup>36</sup>

“The Piṇḍola Ritual” (請賓頭盧法), anonymous, translated into Chinese by 慧簡 (or 惠簡) in 457 A. D. sets forth an anecdote of Piṇḍolabharadvāja-arhat,<sup>37</sup> teaching the wealthy people to extend help to the destitute and aged. The life of Buddhist monks in Chinese Turkestan was in some cases very this-worldly. Some of them were landlords and had wives and children.<sup>38</sup>

Buddhism, when introduced into China, was forced to teach filial piety to common people. The most important virtue in Confucianism was, of course, filial piety which expected a one-sided obedience from children, the younger people, in a family to their parents, who were the venerated ones of the family. This idea, however, was not excessively emphasized in Indian Buddhism, as can be seen in the original Sanskrit and Prakrit texts where there is no such term corresponding to the idea of hsiao (孝), filial piety, although this character is found frequently in Chinese versions of scriptures. Thus, the translators must have added this term. This virtue, of course, which corresponds to the idea of filial piety, is taught in the original Buddhist sūtras, but only as one of the virtues and it is not esteemed as the supreme virtue.<sup>39</sup> The Chinese could not be satisfied with the family moral taught in Buddhism. In Buddhist sūtras, the moral of filial piety in the Chinese sense was not taught, so that, as a last resort, spurious sūtras such as the Fu-mu-en-chung-ching (父母恩重經 the “Filial Piety Sūtra”)<sup>40</sup> and the Tai-pao-fu-mu-en-chung-ching (大報父母恩重經)<sup>41</sup> which teach filial piety, were composed.

In China and Japan the rite of Avalambana or Ullampana (Yū-lan-p’ien in Chinese and Urabon in Japanese) has acquired great importance among people.

The origin of the rites of Avalambana can be traced to scriptures of Early Buddhism (such as the Tirokuddasutta of the Khuddakapāṭha). There is a theory that the original of the Chinese “Yū-lan-p’ien” was the old Iranian word ‘urvan’.<sup>42</sup>

The rite Ullambana<sup>43</sup> was extolled in the Ullambana-sūtra (盂蘭盆經),<sup>44</sup> in which the Buddhist concept of filial piety was explicitly expressed in the acts of offering for the dead parents. This text<sup>45</sup> seems to be a sūtra with additions written by Chinese scholars to the kernel part of an original which had been produced in India.

The Ching-t'u-yü-lan-p'ien-ching (淨土盂蘭盆經) is a spurious scripture composed in 600–650 A. D. in China.<sup>46</sup>

The Ching-t'u-yü-lan-p'ien-ching with scenes in India, spread in upper classes, whereas the Fu-mu-en-chung-ching spread among lower classes of China.<sup>47</sup>

These sūtras spread widely not only in China but also in the neighboring countries, Such as Vietnam, Korea and Japan, and were frequently quoted: commentaries on them were written by famous Buddhist scholars.

16.M. Tathāgata-garbha Texts

“The Perfect One’s Matrix” (tathāgata-garbha)<sup>1</sup> is, according to some later Buddhist thinkers, the ultimate reality, from which the cycle of birth and death of all living beings arises. In this principle, the mortal and the immortal coincide with each other. The term implies the meaning that the Perfect One resides latently within the existence of living beings.<sup>2</sup> It is also the source out of which the Buddha, the Law, and the Brotherhood can come out.<sup>3</sup>

The thought of the Dependent Origination from tathāgatagarbha developed from the combination of the idea of tathāgata-garbha with that of ālaya-vijñāna<sup>4</sup>

The idea of buddhadhātu is admitted implicitly in the Lotus Sūtra.<sup>5</sup> The concept of tathāgata-garbha has something that can be compared to the philosophy of Schelling.<sup>6</sup> Although the origin of this concept can be traced to earlier periods, it developed in later days.<sup>7</sup> Scriptures explaining the concept of Tathāgatagarbha<sup>8</sup> may be classified according to the following three periods:<sup>9</sup>—

First period: No interchange with the thought of Ālayavijñāna as yet took place. The sūtras produced in this period are as follows: the first outcome of the tathāgatagarbha thought is the Tathāgatagarbhasūtra (大方等如来藏經 and 大方広如来藏經).<sup>10</sup> The Pu-tseng-pu-chien-

The first part deals with gotra, the second part with ekayāna, the third part with tathāgatagarbha, and the fourth part with the natural luminosity (prabhāsvara) of Mind. Probably this is the first attempt of elucidating important concepts of Mahāyāna philosophy. Reviewed by Jikidō Takasaki, IJ, vol. XV, No. 4, 1973, pp. 292–299. ching (不增不減經)<sup>11</sup> is a later development of the former. The Anuttarāśraya-sūtra (Wu-shang-i-ching 無上依經)<sup>12</sup> sets forth the theories of the Three Bodies, the Five Gotras and the potential Buddhahood of the damned (Icchantikas). The Śrī-mālādevi-siṃhanāda-sūtra,<sup>13</sup> the Mahā-parinirvāṇa-sūtra, the Mahābheri-hāraka-parivarta-sūtra (大法鼓經), the Aṅgulimālika-sūtra (鳶掘摩羅經), etc. belong to this period. Of the above-mentioned sūtras, as the Anuttarāśraya-sūtra is considered to have been written around 350 or before 400 A. D.,<sup>14</sup> the other sūtras of the first period were probably its contemporaries. It has been made clear that the Anuttarāśraya-sūtra is a composition based upon the Ratnagoṭravibhāga, reshaping its contents into the frame of sūtra style and keeping stress on the bodhi aspect which is the ultimate basis (anut-tarāśraya).<sup>15</sup>

The Shēng-t'ien-wang-pan-jo-po-lo-mi-ching (勝天王般若波羅蜜經) incorporated and modified many passages of the Wu-shang-i-ching. The former must have been composed posterior to the latter and also to the Uttara-tantra-śāstra.<sup>16</sup>

The Candrottārādārikā-sūtra, whose principal figure is a girl named Candrottārā, a daughter of Vimala-kīrti, the layman, also embraces the thought of tathāgata-garbha.<sup>17</sup>

The Sarvabuddhaviṣaya-avatāra-jñānāloka-alaṅkāra-sūtra, alias Jñānāloka-sūtra is cited in the Ratnagoṭravibhāga and other texts. It exists in Tibetan, and fragments of its Sanskrit original and its Chinese version were found in Central Asia.<sup>18</sup>

The Sthirādhyāśaya-parivartanā-sūtra is a scripture of the same trend. It exists in Tibetan alone.<sup>19</sup>

Second period: Although both tathāgatagarbha and ālayavijñāna, are simultaneously explained, no clear explanation of their relations was made as yet. Scriptures produced in this period were the Buddhatva-śāstra (仏性論), the Mahāyānasūtrālaṅkāra, and Commentaries upon the Mahāyāna-saṃparigraha-śāstra (攝大乘論積) etc.

Third period: The doctrine of the Dependent Origination through tathāgatagarbha (如来藏緣起) was completed by adopting the doctrine of ālayavijñāna. Sūtras produced in this period were the Laṅkāvatārasūtra, the Ghanavyūha-sūtra (密嚴經), and the Mahāyāna-śraddhot-

The Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra<sup>20</sup> claims that Śākyamuni went to the island of Laṅkā (Ceylon) and taught this sūtra. There are several versions of this sūtra, one fairly different in content from another.<sup>21</sup> In view of the fact that it contains quotations from the Śrīmālādevisimhanāda, Hastikakṣya, Mahāmegha, Angulimālika-sūtras etc.,<sup>22</sup> it is impossible to consider that this sūtra existed before the time of Vasubandhu. Probably it was produced about 400,<sup>23</sup> or in the fourth century.<sup>24</sup> Some scholars say that it is likely that the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra was compiled in 350–400, and therein we find the theory of Eight Vijñānas in its incipient stage.<sup>25</sup> Another scholar holds the view that this sūtra came into existence sometime between the sixth and seventh centuries.<sup>26</sup>

This sūtra claims that the Buddha taught the two dharmas, i. e. pratyātmadharmatā and paurāṇasthitidharmatā.<sup>27</sup> In this sūtra all phenomena were regarded as the manifestation of deha-bhoga-pratiṣṭhābham vijñānam, i. e. the manifestation of the intelligent subject in the form of deha, bhoga and pratiṣṭhā.<sup>28</sup> The tathāgatagarbha thought in this sūtra seems to be hybrid and inconsistent.<sup>29</sup>

In the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra the basis of the Four Noble Truths was thought to be Mind.<sup>30</sup>

This sūtra represents similar thought to the Gaudapādiya-kārikās and the Yogavāsiṣṭha,<sup>31</sup> and it had some contacts with the Sāṃkhya school.<sup>32</sup>

According to the Mahāyānādhisamaya-sūtra, (大乘同性經),<sup>34</sup> Vibhīṣaṇa, the Rāvaṇa king, comes from Laṅkā, and the Buddha teaches the Mahāyāna doctrine.

The Mahāghanavyūha-sūtra<sup>35</sup> sets forth a synthesis of the concepts of tathāgatagarbha, alayavijñāna and Ghana-vyūha. One scholar holds the view that this sūtra came into existence sometime between the sixth and seventh centuries,<sup>36</sup> whereas others hold that this sūtra was composed later than the Laṅkāvatāra.<sup>37</sup> Another scholar clearly states that it was composed in about 600–676 A. D.<sup>38</sup>

The Mahāyāna-sraddhotpāda-śāstra, (大乘起信論) which was traditionally ascribed to Aśvaghōṣa, and whose Sanskrit original<sup>39</sup> was lost, has been used as a basic text of Buddhist philosophy in China and Japan. One scholar supposes the date of the Mahāyāna-sraddhotpāda-śāstra to be prior to Aśaṅga.<sup>40</sup>

In this text, Nescience (avidyā) is the source of all mundane existence.<sup>41</sup> Because of Nescience, the false assumption which ascribes existence to phenomena of the objective world comes forth. False assumption is not mere non-being; being and non-being at the same time. It is without its own essence, and not apart from the fundamental Mind.<sup>42</sup> The whole situation of human existence is called “suchness”, which involves negation as its momentum within.<sup>43</sup> Mundane existence comes to an end by awakening to the truth.<sup>44</sup> Various kinds of practices<sup>45</sup> are mentioned in this text, but Japanese thinkers explained that, viewed from the basic thought of this text, practices are unnecessary<sup>46</sup> for enlightenment.

In the Daiucchō-shuryōgon-gyō (Ta-fo-ting-shou-lêng-yen-ching)<sup>49</sup> also, the tathāgata-garbha thought is found.<sup>50</sup>

In the tathāgatagarbha-sūtras our original Pure Mind (citta-prakṛtipariśuddha) was compared to gold (jātarūpa), and this metaphor can be traced back to the scriptures of Early Buddhism.<sup>51</sup> In these sūtras the four features of the Cosmic Body of the Tathāgata are acknowledged, i. e. nitya, dhruva, śiva, and śāśvata.<sup>52</sup>

The concept of tathāgatagarbha gave rise to the idea of pariṇāmiki cyuti (transmigration in the condition of not being defiled by afflictions).<sup>53</sup>

mura, Daijō Kishinron Kōwa (大乘起信論講話 A lecture on the Mahāyāna-s). Kyoto: Hyakkaen, Jan. 1959. 2+3+311+7 pp. The thought of this text was philosophically discussed by Shinichi Hisamatsu in his Kishin no Kadai (起信の課題 Problems of the awakening of faith). Tokyo: Kōbundō, July 1947. 3+123 pp. All the translations and commentaries were mentioned in Matsumoto: Butten, p. 49 f. Once Shinkō Mochizuki published the theory that the Mahāyānaśraddhotpāda was not composed by an Indian, but by some Chinese (Shūkyō Kenkyū, NS., vol. 3, No. 5, p. 63 f.). But this assumption was refuted by many scholars (e. g., Matsumoto in Shūkyō Kenkyū, NS., vol. 3, No. 4, p. 81 f.; T. Hayashiya in Shūkyō Kenkyū, NS., vol. 3, No. 6, p. 75 f.; ditto: Bukkyō oyobi Bukkyōshi no Kenkyū, vol. 1). Sōchū Suzuki held the opinion that this text ascribed to Paramārtha was not virtually translated by him, No. 2, p. 49 f. but by Bodhiruci or someone among his followers (Shūkyō Kenkyū, vol. 5, No. 1, p. 21 f.; vol. 5, No. 2, p. 49 f.), but this opinion also was not adopted by others. Hiroo Kashiwagi doubts the reliability of the traditional ascription of the new Chinese version of the Awakening of Faith to Śikṣānanda. (IBK., vol. 10, No. 2, March 1962, p. 124 f.). In any case, it is certain that this text was composed after Nāgārjuna (Matsumoto: Butten, p. 35 f.). A philosophical interpretation of the teachings of the Śraddhotpāda-śāstra was given by Sokō Okamoto in IBK., vol. 6., No. 2, 1958, March, pp. 146–149. The concept of the mundane mental function (妄念) was discussed by Y. Uyeda in Ui Comm. Vol., pp. 101 f. In the Mahāyānaśraddhotpāda-śāstra the Awakening of Aspiration (信成就発心) is set forth as sevenfold. (Hiroo Kashiwagi, IBK. vol. 16, No. 1, March 1968, 58–63.)

Western scholars are very doubtful about the name and nationality of the author of the Mahāyānaśraddhotpāda-śāstra. Erich Frauwallner: Texte der indischen Philosophie B. and 2. Die Philosophie des Buddhismus. Berlin: Akademie Verlag, 1958. cf. J. Rahder in PhEW., vol. X, Nos. 3–4, 1960, p. 171. U. Wogihara suggests that the Sanskrit title of 大乘起信論 is Mahāyāna-prasāda-prabhāvana, based upon the Mahāvṛyutpatti, (大藏經南条目錄補正索引, p. 73). In the Tibetan Tripiṭaka there is a work of the same title (Tōhoku Catalogue 144). However, the content of this work has little to do with 大乘起信論, according to my investigations.

16.N. Other Sūtras

There are some other sūtras whose Sanskrit originals were published recently. The Arthavinīścaya<sup>1</sup> is one of them. The Ajitasena-vyākaraṇa-nirdeśasūtra<sup>2</sup> relates a story of the conversion of Ajitasena, the king of Magadha, by Nandimitra the monk, whose name is mentioned in the Chinese version of another work.<sup>3</sup> This work seems to have been composed in Kashmir.

The prototype of the Ratnacandra-paripṛcchā-sūtra (大乘宝月童子所問法經, tr. by 施護) is up to the 18th paragraphs and the concluding paragraph. This sūtra is cited in Nāgārjuna's Daśabhūmika-vibhāṣā (十住毘婆沙論).<sup>4</sup> It is likely that this was compiled in the Kuṣāṇa period.

The Mahāmāyā-sūtra (摩訶摩耶經) saw light probably about 200 A. D.<sup>5</sup> There are, however, some scholars holding the view that the Chung-yin-ching (中陰經)<sup>6</sup> and the Pu-sa-ch'ut'ai-ching (菩薩処胎經)<sup>7</sup> were produced some time about 400 A. D.,<sup>8</sup> while the Ta-fang-pien-fu-pao-ên-ching (大方便仏報恩經) seems to have been compiled in China in the fifth century.<sup>9</sup> The Chiu-chin-tai-pei Sūtra (究竟大悲經), included in Taisho, vol. 85, seems to have been composed in the period of the Sui and early Tang dynasties.<sup>10</sup> The Hsiang-fa-chieh-i-ching (像法決疑經) is an apocryphal work composed in China in the period of the Northern and Southern dynasties.<sup>11</sup>

17.A. The Early Mādhyamika

17.A.i. Nāgārjuna

The origins of the Mādhyamika school are not clear although one opinion says that the Mādhyamika was greatly influenced by the Mahāsaṅghika school.<sup>1</sup> The philosophy of Voidness (śūnyatā)<sup>2</sup> was established by Nāgārjuna<sup>3</sup> (c.150–250 A.D.).<sup>4</sup> He wielded such a deep influence upon later Buddhism that he has been called the 'Founder of Eight Sects' by the Japanese in general. He was a prolific writer and was influenced by many scriptures.

Although a great number of books have been ascribed to him,<sup>6</sup> only the following are worth considering:

1. The Madhyamaka-kārikā.<sup>7</sup> Several commentaries have been composed upon this work. (a) The Akutobhayā.<sup>8</sup> This is a short commentary, according to the Tibetan tradition, written by Nāgārjuna himself. It has been preserved only in the Tibetan version;

[Studies] The Prasannapadā has been a favorite object of study by younger Japanese scholars. Discussed by Toyoki Mitsukawa in IBK. vol. 7, No. 1, Dec. 1958, pp. 170 f. The concept of svabhāva was discussed by Shigeki Kudō in IBK. vol. 7, No. 1, Dec. 1958, pp. 174 f.; that of loka by Teruyoshi Tanji in IBK. vol. 7, No. 1, Dec. 1958, pp. 176 f. Some epistemological problems in the first chapter were discussed by Tsugihiko in the bulletin of the Mie University, (三重県立大学研究年報, 人文科学) vol. 2, No. 1, March 1955, pp. 8–22. In the Prasannapadā the Samādhirāja-sūtra is most frequently cited, (Hiroki Hachiriki, IBK. vol. XIV, No. 2, March 1966, pp. 195–198.) The Prajñāpāramitā-Ratnaguṇasamcayagāthā also is cited. (Discussed by Akira Yuyama, Shūkyō Kenkyū, Nr. 201, Feb. 1970, pp. 75–126.)

Yamaguchi (Mikkyō Bunka, No. 8, Feb. 1950; Nos. 9 and 10, May 1950; No. 12, Dec. 1950). The work has not yet been completed owing to a fire in the press.

The debate between Nāgārjuna and the Nyāya school was investigated by Toru Makita in Miyamoto: Daijō Seiritsushi, 169 f. In his commentary on the verse 7 of the Vigrahavyāvartanī, Nāgārjuna sets out a list of 119 kuśaladharmas. Examined by E. H. Johnston, Winternitz Comm. Vol., 314–323.

Concerning the authorship of this work, there are some doubts.<sup>28</sup> This book became very important later in Chinese and Japanese Buddhism. There are many citations from the scriptures, and it is likely that this work was composed later than the Madhyamaka-kārikās.<sup>29</sup> It comprises many important philosophical problems.<sup>30</sup>

If the aspirant, having heard the Name of Amitābha, thinks on Him and utters

Louvain, Université de Louvain, Institut Orientaliste, 1970, pp. 1119–1733; Tome IV, XLVII (suite)—XLVIII, 1976, pp. 1735–2162. The thought is discussed in the following work— K. Venkata Ramanan: Nāgārjuna's Philosophy as Presented in the Mahā-Prajñāpāramitā-Śāstra, Rutland and Tokyo, Tuttle, 1966. Reviewed by Lewis Lancaster, PhEW. vol. The legend of compiling the Buddhist scriptures (set forth in the 2nd vol. of this treatise) was discussed by Arthur E. Link, JAOS. vol. 81, 1961, pp. 87 f. However, Japanese scholarship is not lacking in strictly scientific studies in this work, e.g., The Six Pāramitās in this work was discussed by M. Saigusa: IBK. vol. 2, No. 2, p. 188 f. Ryusho Hikata thinks that the main corpus of this text was written by Nāgārjuna himself, and that Kumārajīva changed and enlarged the sentences to a great extent, (IBK. vol. 7, No. 1, Dec. 1958, pp. 1–12). The term 'apadāna' in this śāstra was discussed by A. Hirakawa in NBGN. vol. 1950, pp. 84–125. Citations in the Mahāprajñāpāramitāśāstra were traced; and the concepts of 'the Six Pāramitās', 'Truth', and the 'Bodhisattva' in this work were discussed in detail. <sup>28</sup> R. Hikata thinks that in the Tachih tu lun there are two kinds of passages, i.e., those by Nāgārjuna and those not by Nāgārjuna. References to Vaiśeṣika, Nyāya, Sāṃkhya, the Avinivartanīya condition of the bodhisattva at the fourth stage, etc. are by him. Other portions are subject to doubt. the Name with a faithful mind, he will attain the stage of Non-retrogression (avinivartaniya) towards perfect Enlightenment very quickly.<sup>34</sup> Because of this idea, this work came to be highly esteemed by later Pure Land Buddhists in China and Japan. There has been expressed a doubt that the author of this work may not be the same as the one of the Mahāprajñāpāramitā-upadeśu-sāstra.<sup>35</sup> However, it is admitted that, throughout all his works, Nāgārjuna subscribed to some ideas of the Sukhāvati-vyūha-sūtra.<sup>36</sup>

9. Mahāyāna-viṃśikā.<sup>37</sup> In this work a rather idealistic thought is set forth.<sup>38</sup> It exists in the Sanskrit original and in the Tibetan and Chinese versions (大乘二十頌論).

10. Pu-t'i-tzu-liang-lun (菩提資糧論, 6 vols. Treatise on the materials [sambhāra] for Bodhi). Exists only in Chinese, with the commentary by Īśvara (自在), translated by Dharmagupta between 558–569 A. D.<sup>39</sup>

12. Suhrlekha (Friendly Epistles). Exists in Tibetan.<sup>42</sup> There are three Chinese versions corresponding to it; they are 竜樹菩薩為禪陀迦王說法要偈 translated by Guṇavarman in 431 A.D.; 竜樹菩薩勸發諸王要偈 translated by Saṅghavarman; 竜樹菩薩勸誠王頌 translated by I-ching between 700–711 A.D. In the form of an epistle addressed to a king, Nāgārjuna teaches him how a king should conduct himself.<sup>43</sup> title of the Tibetan version is Rājaparīkathā-ratnamālā, and that of the Chinese version 宝行王正論,<sup>45</sup> by Paramārtha, translated between 557–569 A.D. Similar to the method in the Suḥṛllekha, the writer addresses an epistle to a king, and teaches him how to rule his country. Even the problems of social welfare and leniency toward criminals, etc., are discussed.<sup>46</sup>

There are some hymns ascribed to him.

15. The Dharmadhātu-stotra.<sup>50</sup> This extolls the significance of dharma-dhātu.

16. The Mahā-pranidhānotpāda-gāthā.<sup>52</sup> A series of prayers that one would be endowed with virtues of various Bodhisattvas.

The authenticity of the following works is still controversial.

17. Ekaślokaśāstra. It exists only in the Chinese version, as 老輪虛迦論 translated by Prajñāruci.<sup>53</sup>

18. Bhavasamkrānti-sūtra. Exists in the Tibetan and the Chinese version (大乘破有論).<sup>54</sup>

The Bhavasamkrānti-sūtra and the Bhavasamkrānti-śāstra are a sūtra and a tract attributed to Nāgārjuna on passing from one existence to another. But it is not easy to assign the sūtra whether to the Sarvāstivādins or to the Mādhyamikas.<sup>55</sup>

17.A.ii. Āryadeva and other Disciples of Nāgārjuna

The most famous disciple of Nāgārjuna was Āryadeva (170–270 A.D.) who criticized other schools so harshly that he was hated and finally assassinated by a heretic.<sup>1</sup> The home of Āryadeva was identified differently by various scholars.<sup>2</sup> His works are as follows:

1. Śata-sāstra.<sup>3</sup> This is a short treatise, existing only in the Chinese version (百論), with Vasu's<sup>4</sup> commentary on it, translated by Kumārajīva. In this text he attacked other philosophical schools very severely.<sup>5</sup> This text became very important in the San-lun sect of China.<sup>6</sup>

2. Catuḥśataka. This is the most important work of Āryadeva, comprising, as the name itself shows, four hundred kārikās in sixteen chapters of twenty-five each. It has two commentaries, one by Candrakīrti<sup>7</sup> and the other by Dharmapāla. But neither the original nor the commentaries in their entirety are now available in the Sanskrit text. The complete work with Candrakīrti's commentary is found in the Tibetan version. In Chinese we have only the last chapters (IX–XVI) of the book Kwan pāi lun pan (廣百論本 Taishō, No. 1570)<sup>8</sup>. Dharmapāla's Commentary also extends only from Chapter IX to XVI (大乘廣百論積論, 10 vols., Taishō, No. 1571).<sup>9</sup>

Tr. into Japanese with critical notations by Ryōtai Hadani in KIK. Series, Chūgan-bu, vol. 1, Tokyo, Daitō Shuppan-sha, 1960. Translated into English by G. Tucci (Pre-Dinnaga Buddhist Texts on Logic from Chinese Sources, Baroda, Oriental Institute, 1929, GOS. No. XLIX). The journal Kagami (published by Daitōkyū Kinen Bunko, Tokyo), No. 109, March 1975, is especially meant for the study on the Śata-sāstra. Cf. R. Gard in IBK. vol. 2, No. 2, p. 751 f.

<sup>9</sup> Mahāmahopādhyāya Haraprasād Shāstri published some fragments of the Catuḥśataka mixed with Candrakīrti's Commentary in the Memoirs of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, vol. III, 1914, No. 8, pp. 449–514. Cf. S. Katsumata in IBK. III, 1, p. 260 f. The Chinese version was translated into Japanese, by Jihei Endō, in Kokuyaku Issaikyō, Chūgan-bu, III, p. 197 f. P. L. Vaidya in his Études sur Āryadeva et son Catuḥśataka (1923) published the last nine chapters (VIII–XVI) of the work. Here he first gave the kārikās in the Tibetan version adding the Sanskrit original where available; but where it was not available, he reconstructed the kārikās into Sanskrit from the Tibetan version. And then he translated all the kārikās into French. Later Vidhushekhara Bhattacharya reconstructed the last nine chapters into Sanskrit. (The Catuḥśataka of Āryadeva, Calcutta, Visvabharati Book-shop, 1931). The passage setting forth the conception of Nirvāṇa in Āryadeva's Catuḥśataka (廣百論本) was translated into French by L. de L. Poussin, MCB. vol. I, 1932, 127–135. The Chinese version and Dharmapāla's commentary

3. Akṣara-śataka.<sup>10</sup> It exists in the Chinese (“百字論”) and the Tibetan versions. Other works which are ascribed to Āryadeva seem to be spurious.

4. Mahāpuruṣaśāstra. It exists only in Chinese (大丈夫論).<sup>11</sup>

5. Cittaviśuddhiprakaraṇa.<sup>12</sup> This is a didactic poem containing arguments against the Brahmanical ceremonial system. It shows a tendency toward esoteric Buddhism.

6. A polemical work T'i p'o p'u sa shih lang chia ching chung wai tao hsiao sheng nieh pan lun (提婆菩薩積楞伽經中外道小乘涅槃論, the Śāstra by the Bodhisattva Āryadeva on the Explanation of Nirvāṇa by (Twenty) Heretical and Hīnayāna Teachers Mentioned in the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra) classifies the nirvāṇa-theories of heretics mentioned in the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra into twenty species or patterns. There is some doubt as to whether the ascription to Āryadeva is correct, however, we must assume that it had been composed at least as early as the fifth century A.D.<sup>13</sup>

The following four books, existing in Tibetan alone, are traditionally ascribed to Āryadeva, but they must be virtually works of later scholars.

7. The Jñānasārasamuccaya was composed by a Mādhyamika after Bhavya, i.e., after the sixth century in the age when the Mādhyamika and Vijnānavādins were disputing with each other.<sup>14</sup>

8. The Skhalitapramathanayuktihetusiddhi also is a later work.<sup>15</sup>

9. The Madhyamakabhramaghāta was composed by a Mādhyamika who belonged to the school of Śāntirakṣita.<sup>16</sup>

10. The Āryaprajñāpāramitāmahāparipṛcchā was composed while the Mādhyamika school was becoming more Esoteric (Vajrayāna), just like the Cittaviśuddhiprakaraṇa.<sup>17</sup>

A follower to Āryadeva was Rāhula or Rāhulabhadra (200–300 A.D.).<sup>18</sup> A set of twenty-one verses in praise of Prajñāpāramitā have been preserved in Sanskrit,<sup>19</sup> and in the

According to his research (p. 193), prior to Candrakīrti there was a commentary on the Catuḥśataka by Dharmadāna who was a contemporary to Dignāga and Sthiramati. A new text of the Catuḥśataka was discussed in Bukkyō Bunka Kenkyū, vol. 2, p. 125.

In Candrakīrti's commentary on the Catuḥśataka the notion of Ātman is refuted. (S. Yamaguchi in Miyamoto Comm. Vol., p. 291 f.)

They are ascribed to Rāhulabhadra, who must be later than Āryadeva and prior to Asaṅga.<sup>20</sup> A set of twenty verses in praise of the Lotus Sūtra (Saddharmapundarikastava) ascribed to him reveals that he was well versed in this sūtra also.<sup>21</sup>

From among the above-mentioned works, Nāgārjuna's Madhyamaka-sāstra together with Āryadeva's Śata-sāstra and the former's Dvādaśa-dvāra-sāstra came to be highly esteemed in Chinese and Japanese Buddhism, and formed the ground for the studies of the Sanron (lit. <sup>21</sup> Winternitz says: "these three treatises form the ground-work of the faith of the Sanron sect in Japan up to the present day." (A History of Indian Literature, vol. II, p. 351). This is wrong. This sect disappeared more than thousand years ago both in China and Japan.

This work is one of the fruits of joint research conducted in the Religion Research Room of the East Asiatic Section, Institute of Humanistic Studies, Kyōto University. It is divided into three parts. The first consists of a critical edition of the Chao-lun and a Japanese translation with notes. The second is a study of the Chao-lun itself consisting of critical essays on various points contributed by Z. Tsukamoto, E. Ōchō, Y. Kajiyama, M. Hattori, Y. Murakami, K. Fukunaga, and T. Makita. The third is a lithographic work of the Men-an Ho-shang: Chieh-shih Chao-lun, a commentary on the Chao-lun.

17.A.iii. The Thought<sup>1</sup>

Nāgārjuna classified all Buddhism into three, i.e., Peṭaka, Ābhidharmika, and the Teaching of Voidness; the second being virtually the standpoint of the Sarvāstivādins and the third his own.<sup>2</sup>

Nāgārjuna did not want to establish any fixed dogma, but tried to prove that any proposition set forth by opponents involves fallacies (reductio ad absurdum).

Nāgārjuna aimed at wiping out all dr̥ṣṭis.<sup>3</sup> His method was to point out the fact that a conclusion which the assertor does not want, would result from his initial proposition. This way is called the method of prasāṅga.<sup>4</sup> The “theory of no-theory” was set forth already in scriptures of early Buddhism, e.g. the Aṭṭhakavagga of the Suttanipāta.<sup>4</sup> He kept silent on metaphysical problems, and did not want to be involved in discussions on them. This attitude was inherited from early Buddhism.<sup>5</sup> He regarded various teachings of the Mādhyamika as expediences.<sup>6</sup>

Nāgārjuna states that there is no future or past, and some scholars interpret this thought as meaning that there is only the “absolute present” or what Meister Eckhart calls the “Eternal Now”,<sup>7</sup> although this approximation may be misleading in a way. In order to understand Nāgārjuna’s philosophy certain assumptions of the commentators and many modern students regarding the interpretation of his statements should be set aside. He cuts away the verbiage of speculative philosophy, and annuls the meaningless concepts and propositions. There is nothing inconsistent with the legend that he dabbled in science.<sup>8</sup>

According to Nāgārjuna and his followers, there exists no substance<sup>9</sup> which can abide for ever. All things are substanceless. He refuted the notion of ‘motion’.<sup>9</sup>

The meaning of śūnyatā,<sup>10</sup> the central conception of Mahāyāna,<sup>11</sup> is explained in many ways.<sup>12</sup> In the Madhyamaka-kārikās, it is identified with the traditional term 'dependent origination' (pratītyasamutpāda), which came to be explained by the Mādhyamikas as logical or ontological interdependence<sup>13</sup> or interrelational existence.<sup>14</sup>

Nāgārjuna refuted the notion of identity held on the standpoint of formal logic. According to him pratītyasamutpāda<sup>15</sup> meant idampratītyatā which is substantially the same as śūnyatā.<sup>16</sup> Nāgārjuna interpreted Voidness as Dependent Origination (pratītyasamutpāda). He set forth his argumentation with logical sequence of its own: As things are caused by Dependent Origination, they are without essence of their own. As they are without essence of their own, they are void (or devoid of the thing itself). The order of these three concepts cannot be reversed.<sup>17</sup>

The Middle Way is a synonym of Voidness and Dependent Origination. The traditional interpretation among Chinese Buddhists that the Middle Way means 'neither end nor Void' is based upon a wrong interpretation of a verse (XXIV, 18) of the Madhyamaka-sāstra.<sup>18</sup>

The Enlightenment in the Mādhyamika philosophy is the realization of the Middle Way.<sup>19</sup> The traditional terms 'Middle Way'<sup>20</sup> and 'Non-self' were also equated with Voidness.<sup>21</sup>

The traditional term "Non-self" was explained as "Substancelessness" (niḥsvabhāvatā).<sup>22</sup> It is also called 'reality';<sup>23</sup> this concept became very important in later Chinese and Japanese

Buddhism. Adopting these new concepts the Mādhyamika had to establish the theory of the twofold truth,<sup>24</sup> paramārtha-satya and saṃvṛti-satya, the latter being the traditionally accepted truth, and the former being the ultimate truth newly advocated by the Mahāyāna, although the origin of the theory of the Twofold Truth can be traced already in the scriptures of Early Buddhism and Abhidharma, especially in the work of the Sarvāstivādins.<sup>25</sup> The highest truth is inexpressible.<sup>26</sup> When we view human life from the standpoint of the ultimate truth, the life in defilement of the mundane world is not different from the ideal situation of nirvāṇa.<sup>27</sup> If we regard these two as separate and different, this view is no more than a wrong infatuation.<sup>28</sup>

The logic applied<sup>29</sup> in the argumentation by the Mādhyamikas is quite unique and puzzling. When we apply present-day symbolic logic to these assertions,<sup>30</sup> we are led to noteworthy results. The Madhyamakāśāstra throughout asserts that two things which are mutually related to each other are not one and, at the same time, are not different. Thus the theory of dependent origination (pratītyasamutpāda) that is the basic standpoint of the Madhyamakāśāstra, can be expressed as follows:

This conditional statement expressed in symbolic logic is a real guide in trying to understand the implications of the Mādhyamika refutations of the opponent's views. If we admit that the concept of voidness (śūnyatā) may be expressed by the figure 'O', as was done by ancient Indians, we make another interesting point. The catuskoṭikā<sup>31</sup> (i.e., the four possible propositions in any discourse) can be expressed as follows:

Datta's paper (IPhC. 1958, 11–20) is an excellent study to interpret difficulties involved in the formula of catuskoṭikā.

& a + (-a) + [a(-a)] + [-a(-a)] \\
& = a + (-a) + 0 = (-a, a) = a + (-a) + 0 + 1 \\
\end{aligned}$$

However, we must realize that symbolism cannot do full justice to any Buddhist concept. The result which is derived at the very end,  $a + (-a) + 1$ , cannot be upheld as true in Voidness. Because 'a' as well as '-a' are void and its original word (śūnya) connotes the meaning of zero in mathematics and symbolic logic. Voidness can be expressed as follows:  $a + (-a) + a(-a) + (-a)$ .  $-(-a) = 0 + 0 + 0 + 0 = 0$ . This was what the Mahāyāna wished to express.

There is an opinion to estimate the catuṣkoṭi from the practical viewpoint of meditation. "The four alternatives, disjunctively considered, constitute a preliminary orientation. The alternatives of causation, each denied, are a meditation with upholding of human reason with its inferences, definitions, and the like. The alternatives of existence, each denied, are a meditation with ultimate downgrading of human reason."<sup>31</sup>

With regard to the fundamental standpoint of this school, it is explained as follows:<sup>32</sup>

When and ever since Nāgārjuna's Mādhyamika philosophy was first introduced into China, it has been generally accepted as the doctrine of negation (pratiśedha) by the Sanlun Sect as well as others; the Mādhyamika treatises always endeavour to make clear śūnyatā (or the Voidness) of beings with all kinds of logical reasoning, and the School has often been characterized as 'Negativism'. However, many modern scholars elucidate Nāgārjuna's tenets as nothing but a development of Gautama Buddha's concept of pratityasamutpāda (or Dependent Origination), which should rather be characterized as affirmative, not negative.

Although these two elucidations are seemingly contradictory, both are quite true. It is not sufficient to hold to the one side of these two; Nāgārjuna's fundamental view is that 'Dependent Origination itself is śūnyatā, 'śūnyatā itself is pratityasamutpāda', hence the 'Self-identity' of being with non-being. This Self-identity will be seen clearly in the two dedicatory verses and Chap. XXIV, k. 18 of Madhyamaka-śāstra and in the Vigrahavyāvartanī, k. 72, etc. Without this identity, both Dependent Origination (equivalent to Relativity) and śūnyatā lose their true meanings.

The Twofold Truth (satya-dvaya) consists of: (1) the saṃvṛti-satya, the worldly reality or the mundane truth, and (2) the paramārtha-satya, the super-worldly Absolute Reality. In a sense the former has a common aspect with pratitya-samutpāda, and the latter with śūnyatā; but they are never exactly synonymous. Quite on the contrary, contrasted to the Self-identity between these latter two, the saṃvṛti and the paramārtha may conflict decidedly and may even absolutely differ from one another. This is so, because there always remains the other aspect to which worldly things never belong, i.e., the super-mundane world of Buddha.

Although elucidations about the Twofold Truth are done minutely by Candrakīrti, Bhāvaviveka, Sthiramati and other Mahāyāna ācāryas, they differ somewhat from one another on some important points, especially concerning saṃvṛti. According to Nagao, the word saṃvṛti may have two roots: (1) saṃ-√vṛ → saṃvṛti, meaning 'to conceal (the truth)', hence 'covered' by the avidyā or Ignorance; (2) saṃ-√vṛt saṃvṛtti, meaning 'to become,' 'to originate,' etc. Though these two forms of the word were equally translated into Chinese merely as 'the mundane,' the above-said difference of the meaning of the word may be etymologically traced back even to the theory of Dharmapāla of Nālandā (who enumerated four kinds of meaning), introduced by Hsüan-tsang. This difference may indicate the difference in attitude between the Mādhyamikas and Yogācāras; Candrakīrti (a Mādhyamika) seems to adhere radically to the root of saṃ-vṛ.

It is also interesting to note that in the Tibetan Buddhism of the later period, the technical term ji-lta-ba, or 'being as such' (i.e., the Absolute) takes the place of the concept of paramārtha, and the term ji-sned-pa or 'being as far' (i.e., empirical) that of saṃvṛti. The corresponding terms of those two Tibetan words, however, may be found also in the more ancient Chinese translations (Samdhinirmocanasūtra, Vasubandhu's Buddhata-śāstra, and Vasubandhu's Commentary on the Mahāyāna-saṃgraha, etc.), but without any direct connection with the Twofold Truth. E. Lamotte has restored them in his Samdhinirmocana as 'yathāvattā' (essence) and 'yāvattā' (extension), respectively. But, more correctly they must be 'yathāvad-bhāvika' and 'yāvad-bhāvika', as we can ascertain them in the Bodhisattvabhūmi (ed. Wogihara, p. 37. 1-3, etc.)

The world of saṃvṛti is, however, not merely to be abandoned and escaped from. On the contrary, it is only by coming back to this-worldliness, that religious life may be perfected. This is the reason why all the later Mādhyamikas adhered strictly to the thesis of the 'conformation of things mundane' (saṃvṛti-vyavasthāpana), as set apart from the "Enlightenment" of mere Negation (pratiśedha). And, for that purpose, the correct 'Discernment (vibhāga) of the Two-fold Truth' proves to be the most important key-point. This 'Discernment' has originally resulted from the discontinuity between the two spheres of saṃvṛti and paramārtha; and, it is reasoned by means of the Mādhyamika's own precise logic. This reasoning is like this: the negation of śūnyatā is the negation of Thing-in-itself (svabhāva), but not the negation of things as saṃvṛti or life itself on earth; saṃvṛti is, on the contrary, really established and bestowed with life solely through this negation.

This established conformation and recovered life is called by Candrakīrti 'saṃvṛti-mātra' or 'merely being concealed' (and not saṃvṛtisatya or the truth in this mundane world). The saṃvṛti-mātra is not the world of saṃsāra, but the saṃvṛti or the logos (vyavahāra) of the Saints, the sphere where the Buddhas and Bodhisattvas come back to this world by nirmāṇakāya (apparitional body), rejecting the eternal residence in Nirvāṇa. Here occurs the 'revival' of all phenomena and affirmations, parting from the mere negation and 'silence' (tūṣṇimbhāva) of paramārtha.

The revival of phenomena is itself the phenomena of Buddha's<sup>33</sup> Love and man's salvation by Him. Moreover, the phenomenon as such must be the true beginning of Logic (yukti, nyāya), while all human expressions hitherto are nothing but valueless manifoldness (prapañca), which is rightly to be put to negation. The logical attitude of Candrakīrti, is to follow solely after 'the reasoning already acknowledged throughout the world' (lokata eva prasiddha-upapattiḥ).

The Mādhyamikas had to endeavor to refute the criticism that 'the Mādhyamikas are nihilists'.<sup>34</sup>

How ethical practice can be established on the basis of śūnyatā, is still an immense problem. Japanese scholars, based on passages of the Mahāyāna scriptures, assert that the wisdom of Non-dualism constitutes the key note of the whole Mahāyāna; that śūnyatā steps out into this world, which means destroying śūnyatā.<sup>35</sup> That the selfless deed of donation harmonizes with the fundamental conception of Buddhism; and that Buddha's supreme wisdom is transformed into his great compassion.<sup>36</sup> Nāgārjuna himself esteemed the value of thankfulness.<sup>37</sup> He held the ideal of the bodhisattva of his own.<sup>38</sup>

The Mādhyamika philosophy is still significant in modern Japan. With Mādhyamika thought, as his basis, Shinichi Hisamatsu pointed out the characteristics of Oriental Nothingness, which transcends being and non-being.<sup>39</sup> Nietzsche viewed "European nihilism" as the European form of Buddhism, under the influence of Schopenhauer; but Nishitani thinks that it was Hīnayānistic, and that the śūnyatā doctrine as elucidated in the Madhyamaka-śāstra, Lin-chi-lu, etc., contains something yet unattainable.<sup>40</sup>

The Mādhyamaka philosophers refuted non-Buddhist philosophical systems, such as the Sāṃkhya,<sup>41</sup> the Vaiśeṣika and others.

17.B. The Early Vijñānavādins

17.B.i. The Beginning and Maitreya-nātha

The Vijñānavādins<sup>1</sup> are also called Yogācāras.<sup>2</sup> These names literally mean “those who practise meditation”. In the practice of meditation, this school denied the existence of the <sup>1</sup> Expositions on the Representation-Only theory in Western languages are not numerous, e.g. History of Philosophy Eastern and Western, ed. by S. Radhakrishnan and others, vol. 1, London 1952, pp. 179 f., 208 f. S. Radhakrishnan: Indian Philosophy, vol. 1, p. 624 f.; S. Dasgupta: A History of Indian Philosophy, vol. 1, Cambridge, 1922, p. 145 f.

[General Expositions in Japanese] In contrast with this, there are in Japan a great many scholars engaged in the studies of the vijñaptimātratā theory. The history of critical studies of this school in Japan was described by Shunkyō Katsumata (Bukkyō Kenkyū, V., Nos. 5 and 6, p. 147 f.). We shall mention some important ones as follows:

Ryōun Hanada: Yuishiki Yōgi (唯識要義 Essentials of Representation-Only Philosophy), Kyoto, Kōkyō Shoin, 1916. Jiryō Masuda: Der individualistische Idealismus der Yogācāra-Schule, Versuch einer genetischen Darstellung, Heidelberg, 1926, (Materialien zur Kunde des Buddhismus, 10 Heft). Reibun Yūki: Shin-ishiki-ron yori mitaru Yuishiki Shisōshi (心意識論より見たる唯識思想史 History of Vijñaptimātratā Thought), Tokyo, Tōhōbunka-gakuin Tokyo Kenkyūjo (Academy of Oriental Culture, Tokyo Institute), 1935. Sōchū Suzuki: Yuishiki Tetsugaku Gaisetsu (唯識哲学概説 Outline of Vijñaptimātratā Philosophy), Tokyo, Meiji-shoin, 1957. The later Vijñaptimātratā thought is asserted in contrast with the older view. The four chapters concern the Vijñaptimātratā philosophy of Maitreya, Asaṅga, Vasubandhu and include a summary discussion. S. Suzuki: Yuishiki Tetsugaku Kenkyū (唯識哲学研究 Studies in Vijñaptimātratā Philosophy), Tokyo, Meiji-shoin, 1958. This comprises eight essays expounding the various problems relating to Vijñaptimātratā thought. Seibun Fukaura: Yuishikigaku Kenkyū (唯識学研究 Studies in the Representation-Only System), vol. 1 (historical); vol. 2 (doctrinal), Kyoto, Nagata Bunshōdō. Yoshifumi Ueda: Yuishiki Shisō Kenkyū (唯識思想研究 Idealistic Theory of Buddhism), Kyoto, Nagata Bunshōdō, 1951. The author claims that the idealistic theory of Vijñaptimātratā (lit., consciousness-only) stands on the basis of synthesizing both causal theories of Tathāgatagarbha and bija (seed). And as a conclusion to his study of the three self-natures, he states that the theory of Voidness (śūnyatā) is not contradictory to the idealistic theory. The antagonistically considered systems are mutually interrelated, the latter being a development out of the former. Yoshifumi Ueda, Bukkyō Shisōshi Kenkyū—Indo no Daijō Bukkyō (佛教思想史研究—インドの大乗佛教 Studies on the history of Buddhist thought, Mahāyāna of India), Kyoto, Nagata Bunshōdō, April 1951, 4+4+432+3 pp. Cf. Y. Ueda in Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, Nos. 8 and 9, Sept. 1953, pp. 30–38. The term ‘Representation Only’ was discussed by Jitsudō Nagasawa in Taishō Daigaku Gakuhō, No. 38, pp.80–95. Yoshifumi Ueda: Daijō Bukkyō Shisō no Kompon Kōzō (cf. supra). Junshō Tanaka, Bukkyō ni okeru Kū to Shiki (佛教における空と識 Voidness and Consciousness in Buddhism), Kyoto, Nagata Bunshōdō, Jan. 1963, 2+2+203 pp. In this work the thought of Asaṅga and that of Dharmapāla are chiefly discussed. Buddhist Idealism was explained from the standpoint of modern psychology. Agency: The Eastern Institute, inc., March, 1975. (The studies by the author are chiefly based on the Madhyāntavibhāga). The relationship between the subject and object in the early Yogācāra was discussed by Yoshifumi Ueda, Suzuki Nenpō, No. 8, 1971, 1–8. Zenemon Inouye: Bukkyō no Rinrigaku-teki Kenkyū—Yuishiki Daijō o Chūshin to shite (佛教の倫理学的研究—唯識大乘を中心として Ethical Studies on Buddhism with Vijñānavāda as its focus), Kyoto, Hyakkaen, March 1967, 6+2+8+460 pp. Junshō Tanaka: Kūgan to Yuishiki-kan—Sono Genri to Hatten (空観と唯識観—その原理と発展 The teachings of Voidness and Idealism), Kyoto, Nagata Bunshōdō, Jan. 1963. [Studies on specific problems] Discriminative and Non-discriminative knowledges were discussed by Joichi Suetuna, IBK, vol. XVI, No. 1, Dec. 1967, 1–5. Yeh Ah-yueh: The Characteristics of the Theory of Śūnyatā in the Vijñānavādin School, Tōhōgaku, No. 44, July 1972, 123–144. The term ‘avaśiṣṭa’ in early Yogācāra philosophy means ‘being’. Idealism were discussed by Noritoshi Aramaki, NBGN. No. 32, March 1967, 66–94. Development of Buddhist Idealism was traced by Junshō Tanaka, Mikkyō Bunka, No. 66, Feb. 1964, 1–12. Ālayavijñāna was the central conception of this school. The meaning of this term was discussed by H. Ui: Yuishin no Jissen (唯心の実践), Tokyo, Daitō Shuppansha 1934, p. 52 f.; 101 f.; Y. Ueda in Bukkyō Kenkyū, II, 1, p. 33 f.; ditto: Bukkyō Shisōshi Kenkyū, (cf. supra, p. 104 f.). The term is mentioned in various passages of the scriptures (Jūbin Itō, in IBK. I, 2, p. 158). It has many synonyms (S. Fukihara, in IBK. I, 2, p. 120 f.). It is the fundamental vijñāna (K. Tamaki, in IBK. II, 1, p. 296 f.), and common people assume it to be the substantial self, (R. Yuki, in Bukkyō Kenkyū, III, 3, p. 110 f.).

Yuishiki Gakujutsu-go Sakuin (唯識學術語索引, Index of Technical Terms of the Vijñaptimātratā School) Kyoto, Ōtani Univ., Oct. 1952. Compiled by Shōju Inaba. All the technical terms in all the Chinese versions of Yogācārabhūmiśāstra and in the Chinese version of Asaṅga's Kenyo-Shōgyō-Ron (顯揚聖教論) are collected with sources. Tibetan and, when possible, Sanskrit equivalents also are mentioned.

All works of Buddhist Idealism in India, Tibet, China, Korea and Japan are listed in the following work: Reimon Yūki, Yuishikigaku Tensekishi (唯識學典籍志 A bibliography of Buddhist Idealism), Tokyo, The Institute of Oriental Culture, University of Tokyo, March 1962, 4+4+607+13+8 pp.

<sup>2</sup> H. Ui uses the term Yogācāra for designating this school, but Sōchū Suzuki asserts that the term vijñānavāda is more suitable for this school (Shūkyō Kenkyū, X, No. 2, p. 24 f.). The term Yogācāra was used even by Maitreyanātha, whereas the term vijñānavāda came into use in later days.

<sup>3</sup> Non-existence of objects in Buddhist Idealism is discussed by Chito Fujimoto in IBK. vol. 5, No. 1, Jan. 1957, p. 144 f. Buddhist Idealism has problems in common with the philosophy of Whitehead. (Kenneth K. Inada, in Eng., in IBK. vol. 7, No. 2, March 1959, pp. 750 f.).

existence, and uses such terms as dharmas, viññānas, ālaya-viññāna, parināma, bija, vāsanā etc. in order to educe the real facts of experience.<sup>6</sup>

Buddhist Idealism teaches that all phenomena are nothing but the manifestations (pratibhāsa)<sup>7</sup> out of the 'seeds'<sup>8</sup> of the phenomena and that all the seeds constitute the Ālaya-viññāna. No object<sup>9</sup> can exist apart from the function of cognition by the subject. The function of the subject is the basis upon which all objects appear.

The traditional concept of the Middle Way was inherited by Buddhist Idealism. All things are named neither "decidedly existing" nor "decidedly not-existing". The realization of the Middle Way is our active accomplishment of Vijñapti-mātratā.<sup>10</sup> The theory of the Twelve Link Dependent Origination was inherited by Buddhist Idealism, and was thought of as based on the Dependent Origination from the Ālaya-viññāna.<sup>11</sup> As our task in the future, the stratification of human consciousness should be investigated from the standpoint of depth-psychology, as in the cases of Sāṃkhya and the Vijñāna-vāda philosophy.<sup>12</sup> The concept of the ālaya-viññāna can be traced in the sect of Hīnayāna in its incipient stage.<sup>13</sup> The theory of Representation Only<sup>14</sup> was already set forth in the Samdhinirmocana-sūtra<sup>15</sup> and the Mahā-

<sup>6</sup> This was discussed by Tetsurō Watsuji in his Jinkaku to Jinruise (Collected Works of T. Watsuji, 1962). Recently Kenneth Kameo Inada, now at the University of Hawaii, submitted a dissertation to the University of Tokyo, entitled: An Analysis of the Movement of thought from Śūnyavāda to Vijñānavāda. Ālayaviññāna was discussed by L. de La V. Poussin, MCB, vol. 13, 1934-1935, 145-168. The conversion (轉依) of Ālaya was discussed by S. <sup>15</sup> Samdhinirmocanasūtra, L'explication des mystères: texte tibétain édité et traduit par É. Lamotte, Louvain 1935, Univ. de Louvain, Recueil de travaux, Série II, 34. The Chinese version of this sūtra (解深密經) translated by Hsiang-tsang, 5 chuans, (Taishō, No. 676) was translated into Japanese by Masafumi Fukaura in Kokuyaku Issaikyō; Kyōshū-bu, vol. 3. Cf. H. The first chapter of the sūtra was investigated by Jitsudō Nagasawa in IBK, vol. 6, No. 1, Jan. 1958, pp. 209-212. Jñānagarbha's commentary on the eighth chapter (Ārya-Maitreya-kevala-parivarta) was critically edited by Jōshō Nozawa with an English introduction. Nagasawa, Taishō Kiyō, vol. 43, 1-50. Jñānagarbha's explanation on the mirror simile in this sūtra was investigated by Jitsudō Nagasawa in IBK, vol. 7, No. 2, March 1959, pp. 252-255. Fukaura (op. cit., introd.) asserts that this sūtra was translated in 647 A.D. This sūtra discusses things like an Abhidharma work. A passage of it is cited in the 十八空論. Various passages are cited in Maitreya's Yogācāra-bhūmi. It was probably composed after Nāgārjuna and before Maitreya. Nagasawa expresses his opinion that the chapter of "Paramārtha-samudgata" or the Mujishōsō-bon was formed and incorporated into the Samdhinirmocana-sūtra after the composition of the Triniḥsvabhāva śāstra by Vasubandhu and before the advent of Guṇabhadra in China (435 A.D.). (Jitsudō Nagasawa in IBK, vol. 11, No. 2, March 1963, pp. 40-45.)

yāna-abhidharma-sūtra.<sup>16</sup> The former was translated into Chinese four times, with all versions extant, and Yüan-tsan's commentary on the Chinese translation<sup>17</sup> by Hsüang-tsang was translated into Tibetan.<sup>18</sup>

The Yogācāra philosophy in its incipient stage can be noticed in Asvaghōṣa,<sup>19</sup> but the founder of this school was Maitreya or Maitreya-nātha<sup>20</sup> (c. 270–350 A.D.), who was later identified with Maitreya Bodhisattva, the future Buddha. About the process H. Ui says: there was a historical person who was named Maitreya. In ancient India teachers were highly venerated and often, so to speak, deified in the course of time by their pupils. Asaṅga heartily venerated his teacher Maitreya who was respectfully called Maitreya-Bodhisattva. Thus, the followers of Asaṅga identified him with Bodhisattva Maitreya, the future Buddha. As for Maitreya's works, the Chinese tradition enumerates the Yogācārabhūmi, the Yogavibhāga (now lost), the Mahāyāna-sūtrālaṅkāra, the Madhyāntavibhāga, and the Vajracchedikāvyaḅhyā, while the Tibetan tradition has the Mahāyāna-sūtrālaṅkāra, the Madhyāntavibhāga, the Abhisamayālaṅkāra, the Dharmadharmatāvibhāga and the Uttarātantra.<sup>21</sup> So he must have written six works.

1. Yogācāra-bhūmi.<sup>22</sup> This seems to have been the fundamental text of the Yogācāras.

J. Nozawa: Daijō-Bukkyō Yuga-gyō no Kenkyū (大乘佛教瑜伽行の研究 Studies in the Yogācāra of Mahāyāna Buddhism), Kyoto, Hōzōkan, March 1957, 435+138 pp. The volume is a Japanese translation of the following: (1) The text of Maitreya-parivarta, the eighth chapter of Samdhi-nirmocana-sūtra, and its two Commentaries, i.e., (2) Āryamaitreyakevala-parivarta-bhāṣya, and (3) Samdhinirmocana-sūtra-vyākhyāna. The introduction of the volume treats the Samdhinirmocana-sūtra together with its commentaries and also discusses the development and significance of the Yogācāra system. A Tibetan version of the Āryamaitreyakevala-parivarta-bhāṣya is edited and appended with an English prefatory note.

The same chapter of this sūtra was investigated by Jitsudō Nagasawa also in Taishō Daigaku Kenkyū Kiyō, No. 43, pp. 1–50. (Based upon his study in 1957.) He says that Jñānagarbha lived in c. 8th century.

The Samdhinirmocana-sūtra translated by Paramārtha is slightly different from that by Hsüang-tsang with regard to the philosophical standpoint (性相融即). The former is based on the viewpoint of conflation reality and phenomena, whereas the latter is based on that of distinction between reality and phenomena (性相永別). (Y. Ueda: Daijō Bukkyō Shisō no Kompon Kōzō, pp. 193–212).

<sup>19</sup> This sūtra has been lost, and fragments alone have been preserved in other treatises. It has a close connection with the Mahāyāna-saṅgraha. H. Ui: Shōdaijō-ron etc., p. 28 f. Cf. Kankai Takai: Buttan 2500 nen Kinen etc., p. 619 f.; Wogihara Unrai Bunshū, p. 433 f. Ninkaku Takada says that originally Abhidharmasūtra was not a single text, but a common noun meaning an anthology of passages of Abhidharmas. (Mikkyō Bunka, No. 26, March 1954, 20–37.)

(G Tucci: On some Aspects of the Doctrines of Meitreyā (nātha) and Asaṅga, University of Calcutta, 1930; Also, Minor Buddhist Texts, Roma 1956, p. 8 ff). However, Lamotte is still against his opinion. (Preface to Yamaguchi Karmasiddhiprakaraṇa).

The name of this school must have been closely connected with this text. The text was translated entirely into Chinese in 100 chuans by Hsüang-tsang.<sup>23</sup> Some parts have been preserved in the Tibetan version. One portion of this text is the Bodhisattvabhūmi,<sup>24</sup> which has been preserved in the Sanskrit original and the Tibetan and Chinese versions. The portion<sup>25</sup> setting forth the disciplines of the bodhisattva is important in terms of practice. The bodhicitta arises owing to four causes.<sup>26</sup>

Ui: Yuga-ron Kenkyū (瑜伽論研究 Studies in the Yogācārabhūmi-śāstra), Tokyo, Iwanami Shoten, Oct. 1958, 11+377+20 pp. A part of the text was translated by Paramārtha into Chinese as an independent work called 決定藏論, critically edited and studied by H. Ui: ITK. VI, pp. 541–789.

The Yogācāra-bhūmi states that Mahāyāna has seven characteristics. (Seishō Yuki-yama in IBK. vol. 10, No. 2, March 1962, pp. 215–218). The word “Vyavasthāna” in the Bodhisattva-bhūmi means ‘putting forth in words properly, with certainty for permanent use’. (Eshō Mikogami in IBK. vol. 8, No. 2, March 1960, p. 140 f.). The problem of the Three Vehicles, especially in the Śrāvaka-bhūmi, was discussed by Giyū Nishi in IBK. vol. 7, No. 2, March 1959, pp. 271–278.

The work of copying the Chinese version of the Yogācārabhūmi in the Nara period was investigated by Shunpō Horiike (in Nanto Bukkyō, No. 1, Nov. 1954, pp. 97–106) at the wish of Empress Kōmyō. It was inevitable to make many careless mistakes owing to forced labor.

<sup>24</sup> The Bodhisattvabhūmi (A Statement of Whole Course of Bodhisattvas), which must have been an independent book, is included in the Yogācārabhūmi as its fifteenth section. The Sanskrit text was edited by Unrai Wogihara in Tokyo in two fascicules, 1930 and 1936 (414+5+24+43+12+7 pp.), together with his dissertation: Lexikalisches aus der Bodhisattvabhūmi. (Reviewed by Poussin in MCB. vol. 5, 1936–37, pp. 268–269.) Cf. Poussin, MCB. vol. I, 1932, 397–398.

The chapter on the perfection of Dhyāna of the Bodhisattvabhūmi was analysed by P. Demiéville, Schayer Comm. Vol., 109–128.

An index to the text with Chinese equivalents to, and Japanese explanations on, the important words therein, was compiled by H. Ui: Bonkan Taishō Bosatsuji Sakuin (梵漢对照菩薩地索引) (An Index to the Bodhisattvabhūmi, Sanskrit and Chinese), 600 pp., published by the Suzuki Foundation, Ōtsuka Tokyo, Nov. 1961. Difficult technical terms and sentences in the Sanskrit original are explained by H. Ui in this work, so that it can serve as a sort of Buddhist Sanskrit dictionary.

There exist fragments of the Old Khotanese translation of the Bodhisattvabhūmi. (Monumenta Serindica, vol. 4, Appendix, p. 355.)

<sup>25</sup> All in all, there exist six versions of the portion setting forth the disciplines of the bodhisattva. They are as follows:

1. 「菩薩地持經」
2. 「菩薩善戒經」
3. 「瑜伽師地論」本地分中菩薩地
4. 曇無讖訳 「菩薩戒本」 (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 1107 f.)
5. 玄奘訳 「菩薩戒本」および「羯磨文」 (Taishō, vol. 24, p. 1104 f; p. 1110 f.)
6. Nalinaksha Dutt: “Bodhisattva Prātimokṣa Sūtra” Calcutta, 1931.
7. Bodhisattvabhūmi.

In view of the fact that the Bodhisattva-prātimokṣa-sūtra contains some portions which are lacking in other versions and that it is detailed as a whole, we are led to the conclusion that this sūtra was composed later.

published.<sup>28</sup> It is still problematic whether the whole text was composed at one time. On this text there is a commentary<sup>29</sup> by 最勝子 etc., translated into Chinese by Hsüang-tsang. This text was commented upon in China.<sup>30</sup>

As a predecessor of the Representation<sup>31</sup>-Only theory this text delivers various important thoughts. One of them is that of potentialities (bija, seeds) which make up the Store Consciousness. The concept was probably inherited from the Sautrāntica school,<sup>32</sup> and is traced in the Abhidharma-mahā-vibhāṣā-śāstra.<sup>33</sup> Later it came to be asserted that the religious mind<sup>34</sup> comes out of innate pure seeds.<sup>35</sup> Living beings were classified in five groups.<sup>36</sup> Whether this text actually sets forth the concept of manovijñāna has been controversial among scholars.<sup>37</sup> The Yogācārabhūmi is indeed a thesaurus of Buddhist lore of time-honored tradition.<sup>38</sup> There is an opinion that, as the contents of the Yogācārabhūmi are substantially different to a great extent from other works ascribed to Maitreya, its author may be different from Maitreya-nātha.<sup>39</sup>

2. Mahāyāna-sūtrālaṅkāra. It exists in the Sanskrit original and the Tibetan and Chinese versions.<sup>40</sup> The similarity between this and the Bodhisattvabhūmi should be noticed.

The concept of karma in the Yogācārabhūmi was discussed by J. Nagasawa: NBGN. No. 25, 1959, pp. 277-299. A portion in Tibetan was published. Before Haribhadra (at the end of the 8th century) there were Ārya-Vimuktisena and Bhadanta Vimuktisena and both of them explained topics of the Abhisamayālaṅkāra.<sup>47</sup> Ārya-Vimuktisena wrote a commentary on it.<sup>48</sup>

It is likely that he composed a work entitled Yogavibhāga-sāstra.<sup>57</sup> The Ratna-gotra-vibhāga-mahāyāna-uttaratantrasāstra,<sup>58</sup> which is ascribed to him according to the Tibetan tradition, seems to have been composed by Sāramati (350–450). It exists in the Sanskrit original and in the Tibetan and Chinese versions.<sup>59</sup> To Sāramati (堅意, 堅慧) other works studies on this text were critically evaluated and examined carefully by L. Poussin in MCB. vol. 3, 1934–35, pp. 383–389.

According to the Chinese tradition the Ratnagotravibhāgasāstra (Uttaratantra) is attributed to Sāramati. E. H. Johnston attributed it to Sthiramati erroneously, according to the studies by H. Ui and Yoshifumi Uyeda. The word amuktajñā in this work means "not deviated from wisdom." (J. Takasaki, IBK. vol. 6, No. 1, Jan., 1958, pp. 186-190.) 17.B.ii. Asaṅga

Asaṅga (c. 310–390),<sup>1</sup> inheriting the teachings from Maitreya-nātha, expounded the Vijnānavāda systematically. The following books are ascribed to him:

1. Mahāyāna-saṃgraha.<sup>2</sup> The Sanskrit original has been lost, but the Tibetan and four Chinese versions are existent. The four Chinese versions were respectively translated by Buddhasānta, Paramārtha, Gupta and by Hsüang-tsang. On this treatise Vasubandhu and Asvabhāva<sup>3</sup> wrote commentaries, one by the former being translated into Chinese by (i)

Based upon the comparative studies on the four versions H. Ui made clear the thought of the Mahāyānasamgraha. He adopted Paramārtha's version as the most authentic one, and made the text readable by means of kuntēn. H. Ui: Shōdaijō ron Kenkyū (授大乘論研究 Studies on the Mahāyānasamgraha-sāstra), Tokyo, Iwanami Shoten, July 1936, vol. I, 2+3+790 pp., vol. II, 144 pp. Here Paramārtha's version was fully investigated. Later E. Lamotte published a French translation of the work, in which many Sanskrit equivalents are mentioned. Dr. Ui once told me that these identified equivalents are very helpful in explaining difficult or ambiguous sentences of the text. Paramārtha,<sup>4</sup> (ii) Gupta etc. and by (iii) Hsüang-tsang,<sup>5</sup> and one by the latter being translated into Chinese by Hsüang-tsang.

The system of Buddhist idealism analyzes the nature of things conceived by the human consciousness into three realms or modes<sup>6</sup> as follows:

1. Parikalpita<sup>7</sup>-svabhāva<sup>8</sup> or that which is devoid of an original substance like the infinitely divisible form which exists only in one's imagination; hence that which is of non-real existence.

2. Paratantra-svabhāva<sup>9</sup> or that which is devoid of a permanent substance but is the product of dependent causation; hence, that which is of temporary existence. It is a mixture of pure and defiled aspects.<sup>10</sup> The paratantrasvabhāva (relative reality) in the Mahāyāna-samparigraha is the principle which enables one to turn from defilement to purity.<sup>11</sup>

3. Pariniṣpanna-svabhāva or the ultimate reality, the authentic situation of being, or let us say, the transfinite<sup>12</sup> which is not a process to, but an object inherent in, the principle of the human consciousness.<sup>13</sup> To get into the ultimate reality means to attain the enlightenment of Representation Only.<sup>14</sup>

In this text, nescience as an independent principle (不共無明) is closely connected with Defiled Mind (染汚意).<sup>15</sup> The concept of the Three Bodies of Buddha is expressly propounded.<sup>16</sup> In the Mahāyāna-samparigraha the idea of dharmakāya is set up as the principle in the process to lead one to the final state of Enlightenment.<sup>17</sup> Paramārtha wrote a commentary on this text,<sup>18</sup> which is lost. It is recognized that his standpoint was nearer to that

<sup>4</sup> Paramārtha's translation includes many passages and sentences which cannot be found in other translations. It is quite likely that they are interpolations by Paramārtha. (Jikidō Naomichi Takasaki in Yuki Comm. Vol., pp. 241 ff.)

About the three commentaries preserved in Chinese H. Ui explains as follows:

Three commentaries by an Indian writer on the Vajra-cchedika-sūtra have been translated into Chinese and are preserved in the Chinese collection of the Buddhist works. The first is translated by Bodhiruci in 509 and by I-tsing in 711, the second by Dharmagupta in 603 and the third by Divākara in 683. The first commentary is of verses and prose; the verses are 80 in all, among which 77 are said to be that which Asaṅga was taught by Maitreya Bodhisattva, the future Buddha in Tuṣita heaven. Asaṅga then taught these verses to Vasubandhu, his younger brother and pupil, who commented upon them in prose and added 2 verses at the beginning and one at the end. Thus the whole of this first commentary is said to have been composed by Maitreya-Asaṅga and Vasubandhu. The second commentary is written in prose by Vasubandhu, who is in this case too, traditionally said to have been taught by Maitreya-Asaṅga and composed what he understood. The examination of the contents, however, does not allow us to accept this tradition. The third is also in prose, composed by Guṇadatta about whose life nothing is known at all. The analysis of the explanation of the sūtra given in this commentary tells us that the author's point of view, though it differs from that of the above mentioned three writers, should have been based upon the first commentary.

Concerning the first commentary, the difficulty of solving the problem regarding the real author of the verses lies in the mythic tradition of Maitreya Bodhisattva and Asaṅga. This tradition is firmly believed since the work was first translated, and has become a part of the dogma of a Buddhist sect both in China and Japan. The old tradition brought by Bodhiruci says that Maitreya bodhisattva descending from Tuṣita heaven to this world taught his works to Asaṅga and made him propagate the purport of the works; while according to the latter tradition by I-tsing, Asaṅga, ascending Tuṣita heaven, was taught by the bodhisattva orally, put down what he had heard after his returning to this world and conveyed it to Vasubandhu, who composed a commentary according to what he was taught. Since the story about Maitreya bodhisattva is a myth, we cannot expect him to be the author of any works. There must be another person who was the real author of the verses. Perhaps because his name was Maitreya, the same name of the bodhisattva, and because he was paid great respect by his pupil Asaṅga, the followers of Asaṅga confused him with the bodhisattva in Tuṣita heaven. We may assume, therefore, that the 77 verses were composed by Maitreya who taught them to Asaṅga and Asaṅga conveyed them to Vasubandhu, who commented on them in prose. This assumption is based not only on the Indian-Chinese tradition but also on the beginning verses stated by Vasubandhu.

Of the second, there are two Chinese versions under the name of the same translator. One is in 2 chuan and the other is in 3 chuan. But no Chinese catalogue of the Buddhist works mentions the latter. This in China, is hardly the case. In comparing the two, however, it is clear that what was translated by Dharmagupta himself is the first one, i.e., the one in 2 volumes, while the other, the 3-volumed one, is a revision of the first by an unknown Chinese writer. This second commentary explains the sūtra under the seven items which are said to have been designed by Maitreya. But Vasubandhu's point of view is also shown in the process of the explanation of the sūtra under the seven items.

Of the third, there cannot be any question as to its author, etc. The author is a follower of Nāgārjuna and, therefore, bases some parts of his commentary upon Nāgārjuna's works.

considered to be a work of Vasubandhu.<sup>23</sup> This work is substantially based upon Maitreya-nātha's Yogācārabhūmi.

6. Abhidharmasamuccaya. The Tibetan version<sup>24</sup> and the Chinese version by Hsüang-tsang (大乘阿毘達磨集論) are existing. Recently fragments of the Sanskrit text have been found and were edited.<sup>25</sup> The whole text has been restored tentatively into Sanskrit.<sup>26</sup> A commentary on it was written by 最勝子. The treatise and the commentary on it were put together, passage by passage, by Sthiramati, and the whole work was called the Abhidharmasamuccaya-vyākhyāna, which was translated by Hsüang-tsang into Chinese (大乘阿毘達磨雜集論 16 vols.).<sup>27</sup> Another commentary was written by Yaśomitra.<sup>28</sup>

<sup>24</sup> The Tibetan text of Asaṅga's Abhidharmasamuccaya was published by Ōtani University in 4 fascicles, and that of Prajñāpāramitā-Vajracchedikā-sphuṭārthaṭīkā by the Seminar of Buddhism, Kōyasan University. Abhidharmasamuccaya is discussed in H. V. Guenther: Philosophy and Psychology in the Abhidharma, Lucknow, Buddha Vihara, 1957. (Reviewed by M. Scaligero, EW. vol. 10, 1959, 303-304.) Guenther ascribes it to Vasubandhu.

17.B.iii. Vasubandhu

Vasubandhu (320–400 A.D.)<sup>1</sup> is said to be the younger brother of Asaṅga and to have written many books. Frauwallner<sup>2</sup> expressed the supposition that there were two Vasubandhus, the elder Vasubandhu (c. 320–380 A.D.) who was the younger brother of Asaṅga, and who was also the writer of many Mahāyāna works, and Vasubandhu the younger (c. 400–480 A.D.), who was the author of the Adhidharmakośa and Paramārthasaptatikā. His ingenious studies have met with opposition from a Japanese scholar,<sup>3</sup> and Japanese scholars in general have not yet come to adopt his supposition wholly. Anyhow he is regarded as the greatest systematizer of the Vijñaptimātratā philosophy.<sup>4</sup>

He wrote the following works:<sup>5</sup>

1. Vimśatikā.<sup>6</sup> In this work he refutes the belief in the objective world. It is said that

<sup>4</sup> Kizo Inazu: Seshin Yuishiki Setsu no Kompon teki Kenkyū (世親唯識説の根本的研究 Basic Study of Vasubandhu's Representation-Only System). Tokyo, Daitō Shuppan-sha, August 1937, 7+4+272 pp. J. Kudo: Seshin-kyōgaku no Taiketeki-kenkyū (世親教学の体系的的研究 Systematic Study of Vasubandhu's Philosophy), Kyoto, Nagata-Bunshōdō, 1955. In the history of Vijñaptimātratā, Vasubandhu's system is not only the synthetic result of the series of former Buddhist thoughts, but also the basis of the later developments in China and Japan which differ according to differences in interpretation of his text. The writer authenticates the authorship of "One Hundred Dharmas of Mahāyāna" and others. He claims that one must grasp systematically the fourfold two-truths and the six systems of truth to understand the true nature of Vijñapti theory. He clarifies, also, the uniqueness of Vasubandhu who synthesizes the Tathāgatagarbha idea in his Vijñapti theory.

In some respects Vasubandhu inherited Yājñavalkya (Inazu in IBK, II, 2, p. 328 f.). Concerning his thought, cf. Suguro in Shūkyō Kenkyū, No. 127, p. 18 f.; Wogihara Unrai Bunshū, p. 175 f.

During his life he made a progress of thought (Yamada: Shūkyō Kenkyū, Nr. 123, p. 120 f.).

The Sanskrit text was found and edited by S. Lévi. (Vijñaptimātratāsiddhi, Deux traités de Vasubandhu. Vimśatikā accompagné d'une explication en prose et Trīṃśikā avec le commentaire de Sthiramati. Publié par Sylvain Lévi, Paris, Librairie Ancienne Honoré Champion, 1925. Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, No. 245. It was translated into French (Sylvain Lévi: Matériaux pour l'étude du système Vijñaptimātra, Paris, ibid., 1932, Bibliothèque des Hautes Études, 269). Lévi's restoration into Sanskrit of the lacunae was revised by J. Nasu (IBK, II, 1, p. 113 f.). Formerly G. Sasaki carried on comparative studies on Chinese versions of this text. Gesshō Sasaki: Yuishiki Nijūron no Taiyaku Kenkyū, (Comparative study of the Vimśatikā), Kyoto, Heirakuji Shoten, 1923; reprint 1940. And Clarence H. Hamilton translated it into English for the Chinese version of Hsüang-the Vijñaptimātratā philosophy of the Vimśatikā developed on the basis of the “one-layered” mental basis of the Sautrāntikas.<sup>7</sup>

2. Triṃśikā.<sup>8</sup> This is a systematic exposition of the Vijñaptimātratā theory, explaining how vijñānapariṇāma<sup>9</sup> is effectuated. This text came to be regarded as the fundamental text of the school especially in China and Japan. This text was commented upon by later scholars.

tsang (Wei Shih Er Shih Lun, or the Treatise in Twenty Stanzas on Representation-Only by Vasubandhu, American Oriental Series, vol. 13, New Haven, 1938). The most critical and comprehensive studies were completed by H. Ui (Shiyaku Taishō Yuishiki Nijūron Kenkyū 四訳対照唯識二十論研究 A Study of the Vimśatikā, being a comparative study with commentaries on the four translations, Tokyo, Iwanami shoten, March 1953, 6+228+21 pp.). Here the four translations include one in Japanese and three in Chinese. Kōsai Yasui: Yuishiki Nijūron Kōgi (唯識二十論講義 A lecture on the Vijñaptimātratā-vimśatikā), Kyoto, Ōtani University, July 1964, 113 pp. This is chiefly based on the Sanskrit original. S. Yamaguchi and J. Nozawa: Seshin Yuishiki no Genten Kaimei (世親唯識の原典解明 Textual Elucidation of Vasubandhu's Vijñaptimātratā), Kyoto, Hōzōkan, Sept. 1953, 6+484+41 pp. Rev. EW. vol. 10, 1959, Nos. 1-2, pp. 129 f.

This volume contains full translations from Vinītadeva's Prakaranavimśakāṭikā; Sthiramati's Triṃśika-vijñapti-prakarana and Vinītadeva's Vṛtti; and Vinītadeva's Alambana-parikṣāṭikā. It is strictly a scientific work with substantial annotations and notes, based on original texts. A Tibetan text with a reproduced Sanskrit text is included.

The first verse of the Vimśatikā was restored into Sanskrit by Jisshū Ōga (IBK. vol. 2, No. 1). This prologue verse seems to have been lacking in the Sanskrit original, and the Tibetan version is very close to the original in this respect (Jisshū Ōga in Yamada Comm. Vol., pp. 639-650). Cf. J. Ōga, Bunka, vol. 20, No. 4, July 1956, 72-83. The Vimśatikā was expounded by S. Bagchi, Nalanda Pub. No. 1, 1957, 367-389. Cf. MCB. vol. 13, 1934-35, 390-396. Vimśatikā, translated into Japanese by Shoko Watanabe, Butten (Kawade, Jan. 1969), 277-288. Translated from the Sanskrit into Japanese by Yūichi Kajiyama, Sekai no Meicho, vol. 2, Tokyo, Chūōkōronsha, Dec. 1967. Also Daijō Butten, No. 15, Chūōkōronsha, July 1971.

<sup>8</sup> The Sanskrit original of the Triṃśikā was edited by S. Lévi, cf. n. 32. A later edition: Vijñaptimātratāsiddhi. Edited by Svāmī Maheśvarānanda, Vārāṇasī, Gitādharmā Kāryālaya, 1962. It was translated into French (Lévi: Matériaux etc.) and into German (Triṃśikāvijñapti des Vasubandhu mit Bhāṣya des Ācārya Sthiramati. Übersetzt von Hermann Jacobi, Stuttgart, W. Kohlhammer, 1932. Beiträge zur indischen Sprach-wissenschaft und Religionsgeschichte, 7). Although these translations were done by masters of Sanskrit studies, they are fraught with many mistakes or inadequate expressions in the eyes of Japanese scholars. J. Takakusu translated it into Japanese in 1927. (Only in private circulation among scholars.) At about the same time a translation from the Tibetan version was published by Enga Teramoto. The Tibetan text Sum cu paḥi bsad pa (Triṃśikābhāṣya) was edited by E. Teramoto, Kyoto, Ōtani University, 1933. In 1927 Unrai Wogihara published a Japanese translation with very critical corrections of the Sanskrit text. (Wogihara Unrai Bunshū, p. 628 f.) However, the most critical and brilliant studies were performed by H. Ui (Anne Gohō Yuishiki Sanjūju Shakuron 安慧護法: 唯識三十頌釈論. Commentaries by Sthiramati and Dharmapāla on Vasubandhu's Triṃśikā-vijñapti-mātra. Tokyo, Iwanami Shoten, April 1952, 2+3+351+62 pp.) He clarified the thought of Vasubandhu by means of critical and comparative studies upon the two commentaries by Sthiramati and Dharmapāla.

The translation is divided into twelve sections, and the text has a Japanese rendition from the original Sanskrit in the upper half column and the corresponding parts of the Chinese version in the lower column. Ui adds his critical corrections on Lévi's edition. The Triṃśikā was translated by W.T. Chan, under the title: The Thirty Verses on the Mind-only Doctrine, 1957. A Sanskrit-Tibetan-Chinese glossary of this text was compiled by Jitsudō Nagasawa (Taishō Daigaku Kenkyū Kiyō, No. 40, pp. 1-54.) Cf. S. Yamaguchi and J. Nozawa: op. cit., 133 ff. H. Ui: ITK. vol. 6. Triṃśikā, translated into Japanese by Shoko Watanabe (Kawade, Jan. 1969), 289-312. Translated from the Sanskrit into Japanese by Noritoshi Aramaki, Daijō Butten, No. 15, Chūōkōronsha, July 1971. It has been made clear that in writing the commentary on the Triṃśikā Sthiramati copied many sentences from the Abhidharmasamuccaya. S. Takasaki, IBK. vol. 4, No. 1, 1956, p. 116 f. The concept of vijñapti and vijñāna in the Triṃśikā was discussed by Kizow Inazu, IBK. vol. 15, No. 1, Dec. 1966, 474 ff. (in Engl.). Mano nāma vijñānam was discussed by Naoya Funahashi, IBK. vol. 16, No. 1, Dec. 1967, 184-187.

<sup>9</sup> Vijñānapariṇāma was discussed by Yoshifumi Uyeda, Suzuki Nenpō, No. 2, 1965, 1-14. Vāsanā and pariṇāma in Buddhist Idealism was discussed by Akio Ujiie, IBK. vol. 16, No. 1, Dec. 1967, 169-171.

3. Karmasiddhiprakaraṇa. The Sanskrit text is lost, but the Tibetan version and the Chinese version by Hsüang-tsang exist.<sup>13</sup> It sets forth the teaching of karma from the standpoint of Vijñānavāda.<sup>14</sup>

4. Ta-ch'êng-pai-fa-ming-mên-lun 大乘百法明門論 (Treatise Explaining the 100 dharmas of the Mahāyāna).<sup>15</sup> No Sanskrit text exists. The Chinese version was translated by Hsüang-tsang, and the Tibetan version was translated from the Chinese one.

5. Pañcaskandhaprakaraṇa.<sup>16</sup> It exists only in Tibetan and Chinese. (大乘五蘊論 translated by Hsüang-tsang.)

6. Fo-hsing-lun (佛性論 Buddha-Nature Treatise Buddhagotra-śāstra?). It exists only in the Chinese version translated by Paramārtha.<sup>17</sup> The Sanskrit original terms for 'Buddha-nature' (佛性) is tathāgata-garbha, tathāgata-dhātu, tathāgatagotra, buddha-dhātu.<sup>17'</sup> The thought of this work derived from the Ratnagotravibhāga. There is an opinion that this work is a spurious one and not written by Vasubandhu.<sup>18</sup> Another opinion says that the Fo-hsing-lun is another Chinese translation of the Ratnagotra-vibhāga.<sup>19</sup> Anyhow, this text owes greatly to

<sup>13</sup> The Chinese version (大乘成業論, Taishō, 1609) was translated into Chinese by Hien Tsuang. It was translated into Japanese by Hōkei Idzumi in KIK. Ronshūbu, 2. Formerly discussed by Mukuda in Kikan Shūkyō Kenkyū, VI, 1, p. 81 f. The Tibetan text of the Karmasiddhiprakaraṇa was edited and translated into French by É. Lamotte, MCB. vol. 4, 1936, 151–263.

The author clarifies that when Vasubandhu wrote this text, he was a Sautrāntika but inclined towards the Yogācāra views, while simultaneously being informed of the Mādhyamika philosophy. At the end the Tibetan version of Vasubandhu's Karmasiddhiprakaraṇa is appended with a preface by É. Lamotte (in French). Cf. G. Morichini, EW. vol. 6, 1955, 31–33. In Blo-bzañ-ñāñ-tshul's commentary on the Karmasiddhi 11 kinds of argumentation are enumerated. (Jisshū Ōshika in IBK. vol. 8, No. 1, Jan. 1960, p. 144 f.)

<sup>17</sup> Translated into Jap. by Yukio Sakamoto, in KIK. Yugabu, 11. Formerly, the title was cited as Buddhatā-Śāstra. But Zuiryū Nakamura demonstrated, referring to many passages, that the original term of the Chinese 佛性 must have been buddhagotra. (NBGN. No. 25, 1959, pp. 69–88.) Sāmkhya is mentioned in the Buddhagotra by Vasubandhu. Examined by Megumu Honda, IBK. vol. XVIII, No. 1, Dec. 1969, (1)–(8), (in English). Recently the "Buddha-nature śāstra" was analysed in detail by Shōhō Yoshimura (Busshoron Kenkyū 佛性論研究, Kyoto, Hyakkaen, Feb. 1977, 373 pp; appended with a commentary by Kenshū 賢州, a Japanese dogmatician, in classical Chinese).

7. Trisvabhāvanirdeśa.<sup>20</sup> In Vasubandhu's Trisvabhāva-nirdeśa we find the idea of "appearer" (khyātr), which is the religious subject standing at the turning point from defilement to enlightenment, from transmigrating existence to the great self of the Buddha.<sup>21</sup>

8. 止觀門論頌. It exists only in the Chinese version translated by I-tsing.<sup>22</sup> This is a treatise of meditation, consisting of seventy verses; it teaches in the end that we should look upon our body as a conglomeration of skeletons and impurities.

9. Vyākhyā-yukti. The full title must be Sūtra-vyākhyāyukti-upadeśa. It exists only in the Tibetan version, and teaches how to interpret and explain the content of a sūtra.<sup>23</sup> In the fourth chapter of this work the assertion that Mahāyāna cannot be considered as Buddhism is set forth and Vasubandhu refuted it.<sup>24</sup>

Translated from the Sanskrit into contemporary Japanese by Gadjin Nagao, Daijō Butten, No. 15, Chūōkōronsha, July 1971.

In this treatise a concept khyāti is used which means the 'appearance of a figure or a concept'. (J. Ito, in IBK, II, 1, p. 125 f.) The khyātr is the subject which turns from infatuation to enlightenment, from saṃsāra to Buddha. (G.M. Nagao, in IBK, I, 1, p. 52.) About the logic of this work, cf. (Jūshin Ikemoto in IBK, vol. 11, No. 2, March 1963, pp. 231-234.)

The meaning of the term upadeśa in the title is to explain the purport of the teaching of the Sukhāvati-sūtra, and is not necessarily based on the literal meaning of sentences of this sūtra. (S. Yamaguchi, in IBK, vol. 10, No. 2, March 1962, pp. 16-20.)

This text has a close connection with the Daśabhūmika-sūtra. (Kazuya Haseoka in IBK, vol. 6, No. 2, March

The believers of the Lotus Sūtra say that Vasubandhu regarded it as the ultimate teaching of the Buddha.<sup>34</sup> In his commentary on the Sukhāvativyūhasūtra his subjective belief in the Pure Land is based upon the philosophy of Voidness.<sup>35</sup> His commentary on the Daśabhūmika-sūtra also is important.<sup>36</sup> The commentary on 遺教經 (遺教經論) ascribed to him and said to have been translated into Chinese by Paramārtha is virtually a spurious one, probably written by 靈祐 in the Sui period.<sup>37</sup>

The "Treatise on Nirvāṇa"<sup>38</sup> aims at being an epitome of the "Great Decease Sūtra". The authorship is ascribed to Vasubandhu. One scholar<sup>39</sup> doubted its authenticity, believing that it was composed in China, whereas another scholar is hesitant to decide whether it is right. Another treatise, also ascribed to him,<sup>40</sup> explaining a well-known verse<sup>41</sup> of the Great Decease Sūtra which says that nothing existent can become non-existent and nothing non-existent can become existent, explains the central concept of the Great Decease Sūtra, such as Buddhahood, nirvāṇa and permanence.

The Bodhicittotpāda-śāstra<sup>42</sup> ascribed to Vasubandhu, whose Sanskrit original is lost, was translated into Chinese by Kumārajīva. It sets forth the practice of Mahāyāna, including the Six Pāramitās, but its terminology is rather Hīnayānist. The concept of bodhicittotpāda<sup>43</sup> was essential to Mahāyāna.

Vasubandhu is said to have written four logical works.<sup>44</sup> (1) Vādaividhi, (2) Vādaividhāna, (3) Vādakaūśala and (4) Tarkaśāstra (如実論). The Rtsod-pa sgrub-pa which is refuted in the Pramāṇasamuccaya must be the same as the Vādaividhi.<sup>45</sup> Before his conversion to Mahāyāna, he wrote the Abhidharmakośa.<sup>46</sup>

There are some anonymous short treatises setting forth early Vijñānavāda thought. The "Treatise on Representation-Consciousness" (顯識論),<sup>47</sup> translated by Paramārtha in 564 A.D., typically shows the vijñānavāda thought conveyed to China by him.

As is set forth in his works, which were constructed on the foundation of ālayavijñāna (store-consciousness) theory, the philosophical system of the Vijñānavāda is deeply tinged with idealistic or spiritualistic individualism. In the conception of manas (mind or self-hood) or ādāna (seizing) in this school we notice the Buddhist counterpart to the Western concept of "I" or "ego", but the comprehension of the Buddhist Idealism was more practical, so that the school was duly known by the other name "Yogācāra". It was this school that developed the consideration on the problem of subjectivity, one fundamental to Buddhist philosophy, eventually elucidating the import of such conceptions as "Great Self", "Buddha-body" (Buddhakāya) etc.<sup>48</sup>

Many concepts were first formulated by Vasubandhu. In his work the word 'pariṇāma' first came to be used with regard to vijñāna.<sup>49</sup> The central concept pratibhāsa means 'appearing' or 'being recognized'<sup>50</sup> according to his philosophy, objects in the external world are supposed to exist because of an assumption (upacāra).<sup>51</sup> In reality, they do not exist.<sup>52</sup> Various kinds of discriminative assumptions (vikalpa) were supposed.<sup>53</sup> Such a strict idealism provoked severe criticism by opponents.<sup>54</sup> In this connection the Vṛttikāragrantha of Śābarabhāṣya is very important.<sup>55</sup>

17.C. Philosophers in Later Days

17.C.i. Vijñānavādins

In the period after Vasubandhu, i.e., the late Gupta and post-Gupta period, a number of philosophers appeared, and developed philosophical systems which had been established by their predecessors. The Mādhyamika and the Yogācāra developed as independent schools, side by side with other philosophical schools of Conservative Buddhism, such as the Sarvāstivāda, the Sautrāntika, etc. Interchange of ideas occurred among them, and later confluences of schools were conspicuous. The schools were also diversified in several branches in compliance with the scholastic tendency of the society of those days. The Nirākāravādi-Yogācāra,<sup>1</sup> which was called the Truly Representation-Only Theory (眞実唯識説, 正觀唯識説) in China, advocating that the objects and the subject are both void (境識俱空), was introduced into China by Paramārtha (499—590)<sup>1'</sup> and developed as the Mahāyāna-saṃgraha-sāstra<sup>2</sup> school (授論宗). In contrast with this the Sākāravijñānavādin,<sup>3</sup> which was called the Expediency Representation-Only Theory (方便唯識説), advocating as an expediency for common people, that the objects are void, but the subject is real, began with Dignāga, was inherited by Asvabhāva and finally systematized by Dharmapāla (530—561), whose system was conveyed by Hsüang-tsang to China, and then to<sup>4</sup> Japan, as Fa-tsang Hossō-sect (法相宗). The works by Dignāga (陳那.<sup>5</sup> 城龍) (c. 400—480)<sup>6</sup> are as follows:

1. Prajñāpāramitā-piṇḍārtha-saṃgraha.<sup>7</sup> It exists in the Sanskrit original, in the Tibetan version and the Chinese version (佛母般若波羅蜜多圖集要義論)<sup>8</sup> translated by 施護 etc. In

<sup>5</sup> H. Ui: op. cit., vol. 5, pp. 142—145. Recently H. Ui published a comprehensive study on Dignāga. H. Ui: Jinna Chosaku no Kenkyū (陳那著作の研究 Studies on Dignāga's works), Tokyo, Iwanami Shoten, Jan. 1958, 3+345+15 pp. This work comprises Japanese translations and commentaries on the five works of Dignāga originally translated from Sanskrit into Chinese and thereby elucidates his thoughts. On Dignāga, cf. Shōhō Takemura in Tetsugaku Kenkyū, No. 396, pp. 47—52. Ditto in IBK. III, No. 1, pp. 255—259.

<sup>6</sup> The date of Dignāga was variously discussed. It is 400—480 according to H. Ui (ITK. vol. 5, 142—145), 440—520 according to R. Hikata (Miyamoto Comm. Vol., pp. 321 f.), 460—530 according to K. Watanabe (Kogetsu Zenshū, 341 f.) Western scholars, too, are not unanimous: e.g., 520—600 according to Kern (Manual, 129), and sometime in 350—500 according to Randle (Fragments, pp. 2—3). Cf. Winternitz: Geschichte, III, 467. His work was discussed by E. Frauwallner in WZKSO. vol. 3, 1959, p. 83 f.

<sup>7</sup> The Sanskrit text and the Tibetan version were edited with an English translation by G. Tucci (JRAS. 1947, pts. 1 and 2, 53—75). The Sanskrit text and the Chinese version were both translated into Japanese with critical annotations by H. Ui (Jinna etc., pp. 233—330). The substance was expounded in S. Yamaguchi: Kū no Sekai (空の世界 The World of Voidness), Tokyo, Risōsha, 1948. The whole text was analyzed by M. Hattori in Ōsaka Furitsu Daigaku Kiyō, vol. 9, 1961, p. 119 ff. Cf. I Miyamoto: Chūdō Shisō oyobi sono Hattatsu, pp. 606—654; S. Takemura in IBK. III, 1, p. 255 f.

this work eighteen sūnyatās and the ten vikalpas are discussed.<sup>9</sup> According to the teaching, the subject, i.e., viññāna, is existent, and the objects, viññeya, as parikalpita, are non-existent;<sup>10</sup> however, in the prajñāpāramitā, i.e., nondifferentiated knowledge, there is no confrontation of subject and object. A scholar (三寶尊) whose Sanskrit name is unknown wrote an explanatory work on this work of Dignāga.<sup>11</sup>

2. Ālambana-parikṣā.<sup>12</sup> This treatise discusses the objects of cognition. It exists in the Tibetan version and in the Chinese versions by Paramārtha, Hsüang-tsang and by I-tsing. On it there is a commentary by Dharmapāla.

3. Hastavāḍāprakaraṇa.<sup>13</sup> It exists in the Tibetan version and in the Chinese versions by Paramārtha and by I-tsing.<sup>14</sup> The Tibetan tradition, which ascribes it to Āryadeva,<sup>15</sup> must be wrong, for this work sets forth the Representation-Only theory.<sup>16</sup>

4. Ch'ü-yin-chia-she-lun (取因假說論).<sup>17</sup> It exists only in the Chinese version by I-tsing.

5. 觀總相論頌 (Sāmānya-lakṣaṇa-parikṣā). This exists in the Chinese version alone, and is a short but difficult text.

親光 composed the Buddhabhūmi-sūtra-sāstra,<sup>25</sup> which was deeply influenced by Dharmapāla's Vijñaptimātratā-siddhi.<sup>26</sup>

Asvabhāva (c. 450–530) wrote a commentary on the Mahāyāna-samgraha, and this commentary was translated by Hsüang-tsang into Chinese in ten volumes. It is likely that he was senior to Dharmapāla. Asvabhāva inherited the theory of the Three svabhāvas of early Buddhist Idealism.<sup>27</sup>

Dharmapāla's (530–561 A.D.)<sup>28</sup> works preserved in the Chinese version are as follows:

<sup>20</sup> Yogāvatāra, ascribed to Dignāga, and Yogāvatāropadeśa of Dharmendra were discussed by Poussin, MCB, vol. I, 1932, 416–417. Cf. Durgacharan Chatterji: A Mahāyāna Treatise on Yoga by Dharmendra, Proc. As. Soc. Bengal, 1928.

<sup>29</sup> 冠導成唯識論 edited by Kyokuga Sayeki or 新導成唯識論 edited by Join Sayeki at the Hōryūji Temple are the basic texts for the studies. Scholastic monks at the Hōryūji Temple recommend the latter as the most reliable text as of now, and make little of the former. The former was the basic text for the French translation: Vijñaptimātratāsiddhi (1926 f.) Jōyūshikiron was translated into Jap. by Daitō Shimaji in Kokuyaku Daizōkyō, Rombu, vol. X, Tokyo, Kokumin Bunko kankōkai, 1920. Tr. into Jap. by Seishin Katō in KIK, Yuga-bu, vol. 7. Various different and varied opinions have been current with regard to the exact year and date of the translation of the Jōyūshiki-ron by Hsüang-tsang. Masabumi Fukaura in his doctoral dissertation submitted to Ryūkoku University proved that the translation dates are between October (leap year) and December in the fourth year Ken-kei (顯慶), i.e., 659 A.D.

Some peculiarities of Dharmapāla's thought have been made clear in comparison with other systems such as Sthiramati's. Shōshin Fukihara: Gohōshu Yuishiki kō (護法宗唯識考 An Examination of the Vijñaptimātratā Doctrine in the Dharmapāla school), Kyoto, Hōzōkan, Sept. 1955, 12+387 pp. Here an attempt is made to show the objectivity and deviation of Dharmapāla's Vijñaptimātratā system by comparative surveys of Sthiramati's commentaries on the Vijñaptimātratā and the Chuan-shih lun. Discussed by M. Fukaura in Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, NS. (復刊号), No. 1, p. 1 f. The Manovijñāna in this text was discussed by Tenon Shaku in IBK, vol. 10, No. 1, Jan. 1962, pp. 126 f. The Ālaya-vijñāna in this text is discussed by Ryūsei Fuji in IBK, vol. 8, No. 1, Jan. 1960, based upon the ten commentaries in India, and compiled from the viewpoint of Dharmapāla and translated into Chinese, by Hsüang-tsang. This has been regarded as the fundamental text of the Fa-tsang (Hossō) sect in China<sup>30</sup> and Japan.

Some thoughts of Dharmapāla<sup>31</sup> derived from the Ālambana-parikṣā of Dignāga.<sup>32</sup> The reality in a sense of cognized objects (parikalpita) was admitted by Dharmapāla.<sup>33</sup> The confrontation of 'that changes' (能變) and 'that which is changed' (所變) of consciousness was set forth not by Vasubandhu, nor by Sthiramati, nor Paramārtha, but Dharmapāla.<sup>34</sup> Manovijñāna, the seventh Consciousness, was regarded as the support (indriya) of manas.<sup>35</sup> Concerning trīsvabhāva and tri-niḥsvabhāva there was divergence of opinion between the Northern and Southern Temples in Nara.<sup>36</sup> p. 188 f. Some technical concepts were discussed. Defiled Consciousness (有漏識) can develop in some cases due to causation (因緣) and in other cases due to false assumption (分別). (S. Katsumata in Shūkyō Kenkyū, NS. vol. 12, No. 1, p. 111 f.) 因能變 means 'seeds' of the Ālaya-vijñāna, 果能變 manifestation (現行) of seeds. (Sōchū Suzuki in Shūkyōgaku Kōza Kinen Ronshū, p. 641 f.) Cf. <sup>37</sup> Hsüang-tsang's scholarly achievements may be divided broadly into those that preceded his journey to India and those that date from his sojourn there. The former consists primarily of studies in the Mahāyāna Wei-shih and the Hinayāna Sarvāstivāda philosophies of India. It was to seek answers to the questions raised by these studies that Hsüang-tsang traveled to India. According to the biography of Tz'u-ên (慈恩), Hsüang-tsang visited famous scholars all over India and studied all types of Buddhist philosophy, but the high points of his journey as far as scholarship is concerned were his five years at Nālandā, two years in Kashmir, and two years in Magadha.

2. The Ch'eng-wei-shih-pao-shen-lun (成唯識寶生論<sup>37</sup> Vijñaptimātratāsiddhiratnasam-bhava?). This is a commentary on Vasubandhu's Viṃśatikā, and exists in the Chinese version translated by I-tsing<sup>38</sup> in 710 A.D.

The formation of the Fa-tsang wei-shih (法相唯識) school after his return to China is often spoken of as a matter of course; but, in fact, it is very curious, judging from his motives for going to India as well as from the works he translated after his return and the studies of them made by his students, that a school centered around the Yogācāra theory did not develop instead of one centered around the ch'eng-wei-shih (成唯識) theory. It is probable that Hsüang-tsang tried to teach a philosophy centered around the Yogācārabhūmisāstra and that his disciples studied it, but the peculiar conditions led to its transformation into a wei-shih philosophy. The Yogācārabhūmisāstra was not suitable for Chinese scholars of that time. R. Yūki in Tōyō Bunka Kenkyūsho Kiyō (The Memoires of the Institute for Oriental Culture), published by the Institute for Oriental Culture, University of Tokyo, No. 11, Nov. 1956, pt. 2, 329–369.

As the work is a commentary we expect that its contents are faithful to the original, but with regard to the explanation of the text, Dharmapāla exhibits his own opinions and interprets the original in his own way. This, evidently, is meant to expose his new theories and to

The Vivṛta-guhyārthapindavyākhyā (Don gsañ ba rnam par phye ba bsad te bsad pa, Tōhoku No. 4052, abbrev.: Don gsañ ba bsad pa or don gsañ) was occasionally ascribed to Vasubandhu, but it is likely that it was composed after Dharmapāla (in the first half of the 6th century) and before 800 A.D. The content is closely related to the thought of Asvabhāva and Dharmapāla. This text was studied in Tibet up to the 14th century.<sup>41</sup>

Dharmapāla's<sup>42</sup> theory concerning the Vijñāna-doctrine is so important that Chinese and Japanese Buddhism even in the present time is still under its influence, and therefore, a detailed investigation of all of his works is necessary.<sup>43</sup>

Dharmapāla developed the Representation<sup>44</sup> theory even further. He divided Consciousness in eight Consciousnesses, a theory unique to him. But this theory is given only when he explains phenomenal aspects of things.<sup>45</sup> He distinguished the four Aspects of Consciousness, i.e., (1) Subjective Aspect, (2) Objective Aspect, (3) Self-conscious Aspect, and (4) Self-self-conscious Aspect.<sup>46</sup> It is said that the first three were held by other philosophers, but the fourth was assumed by him for the first time. He admitted also the existence of things<sup>47</sup> in a relative sense in Objective Aspect.

The idealistic theory of this school is explained by Y. Ueda as follows:<sup>48</sup> It would appear that a contradiction exists in Buddhist thought between the theory of the emptiness of all things as advocated by the Mādhyamika School and the theory of the sole existence of consciousness as maintained by the Yogācāra School; the one insisting that all things are void, the other contending that while external things (外境: bāhyārthāḥ) or objects of consciousness do not exist, consciousness itself (唯識: vijñaptimātra) has existence.

It is, however, open to question whether these two theories are really as absolutely incompatible as they seem, or whether the conflict is merely apparent. The key to the solu-increase his own importance. It is extremely difficult to understand the meaning of the passages in I-tsing's rendering. We have therefore to take into consideration the original Sanskrit words to make clear the meaning of such passages, otherwise we can not thoroughly grasp what is meant. And I-tsing uses many transliterations of the Sanskrit words which are not known before him. For instance, the words āgama, bodhisattva and others are in some places translated into Chinese, while in other places the Sanskrit words are transliterated. In the cases of such common words, we can easily understand, but if words are unusual, they perplex us to a great extent.

tion of the problem is to be sought in the theory of three self-natures (trisvabhāva). This theory, however, has two interpretations. According to the one expounded by Dharmapāla in the Vijñaptimātratā-siddhi-śāstra (成唯識論), consciousness (paratantra-svabhāva) is existent in the full sense of the term, and so it seems that the theory of emptiness of all things (parikalpita-svabhāva according to Dharmapāla's view) and the doctrine of the sole existence of consciousness can never be harmonized. But, according to the interpretation adopted by Asaṅga in the Mahāyānasamgrahaśāstra, the theory of three self-natures assumes quite a different aspect, for in the last analysis consciousness too is void, so that in terms of this interpretation, the doctrine of the emptiness of all things (parikalpita-svabhāva and paratantra-svabhāva according to Asaṅga's view) and the theory of the sole existence of consciousness (paratantra-svabhāva) are reducible to identity. Apparently Dharmapāla's theory has to be considered to involve a radical shift in position, i.e., from non-being to being. When viewed in relation to the history of the Mahāyāna Buddhist thought, the significance of such a shift in position deserves a serious study by scholars in the future.

The first scholars in Japan to pay attention to the theory of three self-natures were Fujaku (普寂) and Kaijō (戒定),<sup>49</sup> who lived in the Tokugawa period (1601–1867), the latter being much more important than the former in this respect. Their views have been followed by modern scholars such as Gesshō Sasaki and Hakuju Ui, the latter of whom has contributed greatly toward the elucidation of the whole doctrine of the sole existence of consciousness including the theory of three categories by exhaustive studies of numerous works on Buddhist "idealism", especially the Mahāyānasamgraha, which had long been neglected by many scholars both in China and Japan.

Ueda claims to have reached an interpretation concerning the theory of three self-natures quite different from those of previous scholarship. In other words, what has been stressed by Kaijō, Sasaki and Ui as the theory of three self-natures is found to be nothing more than a one-sided view of the theory, quite neglecting to see another and more significant aspect of the doctrine. According to previous scholarship, the ālaya-vijñāna (阿黎耶識) mentioned in the Mahāyānasamgraha becomes substantially identical with that mentioned in Mahāyānaśraddhotpāda. No one can deny that the theory of the ālaya-vijñāna is quite logically consistent in the Mahāyānaśraddhotpāda without going to the length of saying that consciousness is the sole being and the objective world unreal. But Ueda points out that the concept of Ālaya-vijñāna in the Mahāyānasamgraha is impossible apart from the proposition of the reality of consciousness (paratantra-svabhāva) and the unreality of its objects (parikalpita-svabhāva). It is evident that this theory of three self-natures is what underlies the philosophy embodied in the Mahāyānasamgraha. The view cherished by Kaijō and others is unsatisfactory in that there is no necessary inherent connection between the theory of three self-natures and the proposition of the reality of consciousness and the unreality of its objects. Such a view is due to their failure to grasp the theory of three categories in all its aspects. If considered comprehensively, not only the relationship between the theory of the complete voidness and that of the sole existence of consciousness is made more clear and the emptiness of consciousness itself is truly realized, but much light may also be thrown upon the relationship between subject and object, the question of time and various other important matters.

The thought of Sthiramati<sup>50</sup> (470–550)<sup>51</sup> is regarded as comparatively coinciding with the earlier Representation-Only theory. His works are as follows:

1. A commentary on the Triṃśikā. It exists in Sanskrit<sup>52</sup> (cf. supra).
2. A commentary on the Madhyāntavibhāga-śāstra. It exists in the Sanskrit original and in the Tibetan version<sup>53</sup> (cf. supra).
3. A commentary on the Abhidharma-kośa. It exists only in the Chinese version whose translator is unknown (俱舍論義疏).
4. A commentary on the Madhyamaka-kārikās (大乘中觀積論)<sup>54</sup> (cf. supra). In this work he criticises Bhāvaviveka.<sup>55</sup>
5. The Abhidharmasamuccaya-vyākhyā.<sup>56</sup>

Guṇaprabha, who was later than Sthiramati wrote:

1. Bodhisattva-bhūmi-vṛtti.
2. Bodhisattva-śīla-parivarta-bhāṣya, which is a continuation of the former.
3. Pañcaskandha-vivaraṇa, which is a commentary on Vasubandhu's work.

Guṇaprabha, the Discipline Teacher, seems to be the same person as he.<sup>57</sup> Dharmapāla and others represent the tradition of Sākāra-vijñānavāda.<sup>58</sup>

There was another school of Buddhist Idealism, i.e., Anākāra Vijñānavāda. Scholars of this school were as follows:

Guṇamati (c. 420–500) was a contemporary with Dignāga, and Sthiramati (470–550)<sup>59</sup> was a disciple of the former. Guṇamati wrote a sub-commentary on Vasubandhu's commentary on the Pratītyasamutpāda-ādi-vibhaṅga-nirdeśa-sūtra.<sup>60</sup> The Lakṣaṇānusāraśāstra (隨相論) of Guṇamati, whose Sanskrit original was lost, and which was translated into Chinese by Paramārtha in 557–569 A.D., is an abhidharma compendium. It propounds the theory of Non-self in the Abhidharmakośa, IX, and refutes the ātman-theories of the Sāṃkhyas, Vaiśeṣikas and Nirgranthakas.<sup>61</sup> It seems to have been composed in the 5th century A.D. or in the first half of the 6th century A.D.

<sup>51</sup> In the investigation of inscriptions of the Valabhi dynasty, S. Lévi made clear that Ācārya Bhadanta Sthiramati of Mahāyāna was a contemporary of King Guhasena (who ruled till 566, or 570 at the latest), the son of Dhruvasena I (525–540). As the Valabhi dynasty adopted the Gupta era, this date is certain. (Les donations religieuses des rois de Valabhi. Tucci says: "The dates f.i. of Śāntarakṣita and Kamalaśīla are too early, ca. 680–740 and ca. 700–750. We know that Śāntarakṣita died after the foundation of bSam Yas, which took place most probably in 779, and Kamalaśīla died after the famous council of bSam Yas which, as has been shown by Demiéville, took place between 793 and 794. This is a fixed point and, therefore, all dates connected with it must be revised." (EW, VIII, No. 1, 1957, p. 109.)

Reviewed by R. des Rotours, MCB, vol. 10, 1955, 371–379; by J. Rahder, PhEW, vol. IV, 1954, 87. Adopting the studies by Demiéville, G. Morichini says that the date of Śāntarakṣita is 725–785 and that of Kamalaśīla is 745–795, modifying Nakamura's studies. (EW, vol. 11, No. 1, March 1960, pp. 34 ff.) As of now nothing can be said, except that Nakamura's studies are based mostly upon Tibetan studies by Japanese scholars who lay more stress upon references to Tibet in Chinese historical documents; which attitude differs from that of many the voluminous Tattvasaṃgraha,<sup>74</sup> and the latter commented on it. Their standpoint is also called the Yogācāra-Mādhyamika in contrast to that of Bhavya, which is called the Sautrāntika-Mādhyamika. One of the predecessors of the Yogācāra-Mādhyamika was Jñānagarbha.<sup>75</sup> The text and the commentary exist in the Sanskrit original and in the Tibetan version. Śāntarakṣita united the Mādhyamika and the Yogācāra doctrines; Kamalaśīla, being very critical to forerunners, established the third way, i.e., the Yogācāra-Mādhyamika.<sup>76</sup> Śāntarakṣita's standpoint was idealistic, refuting the assertion of the existence of external objects.<sup>77</sup> In the thought of Śāntarakṣita 'self-cognition' (svasaṃvedana) represents the unity of cognition. According to him, every cognition is devoid of both 'the cognized' and 'the cognizer'.<sup>78</sup>

The standpoint of Śāntarakṣita's own system is clearly expressed in his Madhyamakālaṅkāra-vṛtti.<sup>79</sup>

The chapter of the refutation of the concept of Ātman by the Mimāṃsā school was translated by Shūyū Kanaoka in Shūkyō Kenkyū, vol. 35, No. 2 (Nr. 169), Oct. 1961, pp. 60–74.

Some portions of the Tattvasaṃgraha were critically translated in the West. S. Schayer, Kamalaśīlas Kritik des Pudgalavāda, RO. vol. 8, 1934, 68–93. A. Walter Liebenthal: Satkārya in der Darstellung seiner buddhistischen Gegner, Stuttgart-Berlin, Kohlhammer, 1934. Kamalaśīla's commentary on the Anumānaparikṣā of the Tattvasaṃgraha was examined and the Tibetan text was edited by A. Kunst, MCB. vol. 8, 1947, 106–216. The criticism of the Sarvāstivādin in the Tattvasaṃgraha was discussed by Akira Suganuma (IBK. vol. 8, No. 2, March 1960, pp. 156–157), and translated into Japanese by J. Nagasawa (Bukkyō Kenkyū, III, 3, p. 69f.). The concept of pratyakṣa in this work was discussed by M. Hattori in NBGN. No. 25, 1959, pp. 111–127. The concept of apoha in this work was discussed by Shōren Ibara, in Bunka, vol. 15, No. 1, Jan. 1951, pp. 141 f. The argumentation for niḥsvabhāvatā by Kamalaśīla was discussed by Yasunori Ejima, Tōhōgaku, No. 41, March 1971, 101–113. Cf. E. Steinkellner: Zur Zitierweise Kamalaśīla's, WZKSO. The Madhyamakālaṅkāra by Śāntarakṣita was commented upon by Kamalaśīla also. It also represents the thought of the Yogācāra-Mādhyamakāḥ.<sup>80</sup>

Kamalaśīla wrote also the Bhāvanākrama<sup>81</sup> (bsgom-paḥi rim-pa), the Chinese translation of one version of which is 廣積菩提心論<sup>82</sup> translated by 施護 etc., and a commentary on the Śālistamba-sūtra, a Chinese version of which was found at Tung-Huang.<sup>83</sup> In the Bhāvanākrama<sup>84</sup> of Kamalaśīla Great Compassion was regarded as the fundamental virtue.<sup>85</sup> Kamalaśīla wrote a commentary on Dharmakīrti's Nyāyabindu<sup>86</sup>. In his advanced age he went to Tibet, and his controversy with the Chinese monk Hva Śan is famous in history.<sup>87</sup>

Haribhadra (c. 8th century), who lived under the Pāla dynasty, is said to have belonged to the Yogācāra-Mādhyamika (-Svātantrika) school. He was taught by Śāntarakṣita and Vairocana. He admitted the four bodies of Buddha, i.e., svābhāvika-kāya dharmakāya, sāmbhogika-kāya and nairmāṇika-kāya.<sup>88</sup>

Jñānagarbha (700-760) also was a scholar of the Yogācāra-Mādhyamika school. He wrote 14 books which are conveyed in the Tibetan Tripitaka, and was versed in Vajrayāna also.<sup>89</sup>

The 手杖論 (Hastadaṇḍasāstra) by 積迦称 (Śākyayaśas?), whose Sanskrit original is lost, and which was translated into Chinese by I-tsing, explains the process of transmigration<sup>90</sup> and refers to the vijñānavāda theory of Vasubandhu etc. The Sarvadharmaratnottava(-artha)-sāngiti-sāstra (The 集諸法寶最上義論<sup>91</sup> by 善寂, Sumuni), translated into Chinese by 施護 (Dānapāla) in 980-1000 A.D., propounds the ālaya-vijñāna.

The Bodhisattvasaṃvara-viṃśaka by Candragomin was translated into Tibetan by Chosgrub and also into Chinese by the same who knew Chinese. This text seems to have been based on the disciplines in the Yogācāra-bhūmi.<sup>92</sup>

17.C.ii. Mādhyamikas

In the later Mādhyamika school<sup>1</sup> two great scholars appeared, i.e., Buddha-pālita (c. 470–540) and Bhavya (or Bhāvaviveka, c. 490–570), and both of them fell in dispute with each other.<sup>2</sup> The former came to be the founder of the Prāsaṅgika school and the latter of the Svātantrika school.<sup>3</sup> Bhavya's works are as follows:

1. Prajñāpradīpa, a commentary on the Madhyamaka-kārikās<sup>4</sup> (cf. supra).
2. Chang-chen lun 大乘掌珍論 (Karatalaratna). This work exists in the Chinese version alone.<sup>5</sup> In this work the thought of the Yogācāras is refuted.
3. Madhyamaka-hṛdaya.<sup>6</sup> This work is composed of verses, and refutes other philosophical systems in those days. Bhavya himself wrote a detailed commentary called Tarkajvālā on the verses. Both had been preserved in the Tibetan version alone, but recently the verse portion was found, and part of it was edited.

<sup>6</sup> The second chapter, Munivratasamāśraya, examined by V. V. Gokhale, IJ, vol. XIV, Nos. 1–2, 1972, pp. 40–42.

The third chapter (Tattva jñānaparyestiparivarta), which constitutes the essential part of the whole work, was translated by J. Nozawa in Mikkyō Bunka, No. 29–30, 1954, 56–65; No. 31, 1955, 38–48; No. 34, June 1956, 43–52; No. 66, Feb. 1964, 74–87; No. 68, Sept. 1964, 58–70. The fourth chapter was investigated by J. Nozawa in Ōtani Gakuho, vol. 22, No. 3; Mikkyō Kenkyū No. 88; Hakodate Ōtani Zoshi Tanki Daigaku Kiyō, No. 5, Oct. 1973, pp. 203–221. The fifth chapter which deals with the Yogācāra standpoint was translated and investigated by S. Yamaguchi: Bukkyō ni Okeru Mu to U tonō Tairon (佛教に於ける無と有との対論 The controversy between the concepts of being and non-being in Buddhism), Tokyo, Kōbundo Shobō, 1941. (Cf. Niino, Bukkyō Kenkyū, III, 5, pp. 44 f.) The sixth chapter on Sāṃkhya was discussed by Zuigan Watanabe in (清水竜山先生古稀記念論文集) and by H. Hadano (Bunka, vol. 10, No. 9; vol. 11, No. 4). The seventh chapter on Vaiśeṣika was investigated by Yūshō Miyasaka (Bunka, vol. 18, No. 3, May 1954, pp. 24–40). The eighth chapter of this work sets forth the refutation of the Vedānta philosophy; this chapter was translated into Japanese and investigated by H. Nakamura in his Shoki etc., pp. 236–332. The pūrvapakṣa part of the eighth chapter was translated into English, and the verses of that part of the Sanskrit text found by Rahula Sankrityayana were edited by V. V. Gokhale, with the corresponding text of the Tibetan version edited by H. Nakamura in Indo-Iranian Journal, vol. II, 1958, Nr. 3, pp. 165–190. Later, the original Sanskrit text of the Madhyamaka-hṛdaya VIII, vv. 1–16 (edited by V. V. Gokhale, IJ, vol. II, 1958, No. 3, 165–180) was reproduced and that portion was translated into Japanese by Hajime Nakamura, IBK, vol. XVI, No. 2, March 1968, 10–22. The ninth chapter has not yet been investigated by Japanese scholars.

In this work he explains the threefold truths, i.e., the worldly saṃvṛtisatya, the pāramārthika-satya, and the worldly paramārthika-satya, (J. Nozawa in NBGN, vol. 18, p. 18 f.).

It is interesting to note that the Tarkajvālā refers to a colony of the old Iranian stock called Śākadvīpiya-brāhmaṇa or Maga-brāhmaṇa in Punjab who observed their old worship of Mithra and sun-worship.<sup>7</sup>

4. The Madhyamaka-ratna-pradīpa<sup>8</sup> whose authorship was traditionally ascribed to Bhāvaviveka was not actually by him, but was composed later by a later Mādhyamika scholar under the influence of Esoteric Buddhism.<sup>9</sup>

5. Madhyamakārthasaṃgraha. It exists in Tibetan.<sup>10</sup>

The Svātantrika-Mādhyamikas admit degrees of reality and levels of insight into the reality dependent on spiritual maturity and degrees of samādhi.<sup>11</sup>

According to Bhāvaviveka, 1) all the words of the Buddha as they appear in the form of sūtras are pramāṇa. It does not require the verification by reason (yukti). 2) The function of reason (yukti) is a correct understanding of the scripture (āgama) and not a verification of it.<sup>12</sup> But syllogism was admitted.<sup>13</sup> Bhāvaviveka tried to demonstrate niḥsvabhāvatā or śūnyatā by way of syllogism,<sup>14</sup> and Kamalaśīla inherited and developed the method.<sup>15</sup>

Candrakīrti's systematization is as follows:

<sup>14</sup> The logic of prasāṅga in Bhāvaviveka was discussed by Yasunori Ejima, part II, Tōyō Bunka Kenkyūsho Kiyō, No. 54, March 1971, 1–81.

Bhāvaviveka's systematization is as follows:

Bhāvaviveka's category of pariyāya-paramārtha served two purposes: (1) it rescued early Buddhist teachings from the counterproductive negation, which in an important sense is inconsistent; and (2) it pointed to the fundamental contradiction of paramārtha and samvṛti. Bhāvaviveka logically demonstrates the emptiness of dr̥ṣṭi inductively. He sought to prove śūnyatā logically.<sup>15''</sup> It has been made clear that throughout his works<sup>16</sup> he did not distinguish between citta and caitta, in contrast to the Vijñānavādins.<sup>17</sup> He engaged in controversy with Brahmanistic schools, such as the Mīmāṃsakas,<sup>17'</sup> the Sāṃkhya<sup>18</sup> etc., traces being found in his works.

In the Prāsaṅgika school Candrakīrti (c. 650) wrote a commentary on the Madhyamaka-śāstra<sup>19</sup> (cf. supra), and an eulogical poem of 14 verses, called the Madhyamaka-śāstra-stuti.<sup>20</sup> Among the eight books ascribed to him the Madhyamakāvatāra and the Pañcaskandhaprakaraṇa are most important as systematic treatises.<sup>20'</sup> The Pañcaskandhaprakaraṇa is a genuine work actually written by Candrakīrti, for it is cited as a work by him in the Madhyamaka-ratna-pradīpa. It is a work of the nature of abhidharma, setting forth various mental functions (caitta).<sup>21</sup> The Madhyamakāvatāra (Introduction to the Mādhyamika) became highly influential in Tibet.<sup>22</sup> In his Madhyamakāvatāra, what is mithyā, and is not satya, was called saṃvṛtimātra by him. Candrakīrti asserted that it can be viewed from the standpoint of saṃvṛti-satya that even in liberation Nescience without Defilement (asaṃklišṭāvidyā) exists.<sup>23</sup>

The theory of the Twofold Truth, traditional to the Mādhyamika school, was adopted by both the Prāsaṅgika and Svātantrika schools, but their interpretations differed. In the Svātantrika school the paramārtha-satya was the same as Voidness, tathalā, and nirvāṇa, whereas the saṃvṛti-satya is a truth only for the sages, i.e., an entrance to the paramārtha-satya, whereas in the Svātantrika school the paramārtha-satya was divided in two, i.e., the non-discriminative paramārtha and the discriminative paramārtha, the latter being something located between the paramārtha-satya and the saṃvṛti-satya.<sup>24</sup>

All in all, the standpoint of Candrakīrti was rather an orthodox one inherited from Nāgārjuna, in contrast to Bhavya.<sup>25</sup> He resorted to the method of prasāṅga-āpatti.<sup>26</sup> However, the thought of Candrakīrti was different from that of Nāgārjuna in several respects. (1) Nāgārjuna did not know formal logic, and considered logical problems as ontological problems, whereas Candrakīrti knew some formal logic and used Dignāga's principles. Candrakīrti accepted the Prāsaṅgika logical position that a Mādhyamika thinker cannot have logical reasons of his own, but must accept those of his opponents, and then by reasoning come to deny them. (2) Nāgārjuna did not know the idealistic Absolute held by Mahāyāna philosophers and did not refute it. Candrakīrti knew it and refuted it. (3) With Nāgārjuna it is only in the conceptless meditative state of dhyāna that the Absolute is met. Candrakīrti reveals no such deep personal engagement with the Absolute.<sup>27</sup> Moreover Candrakīrti asserted that ātman cannot be perceived, but it exists only by conventional assumption, (prajñaptisattayā asti).<sup>28</sup>

In the school of Bhavya Jñānaprabha (智光 7th century) appeared, and disputed with Śīlabhadra, the teacher of Hsüang-tsang, during his stay at Nālandā.

Śāntideva (c. 650–750)<sup>29</sup> also adopted the standpoint of the Mādhyamika; his works are as follows:

1. Bodhicaryāvatāra.<sup>30</sup> This is an introduction to the practice of Mahāyāna, consisting of high-spirited verses.<sup>31</sup> It exists in the Tibetan and Chinese<sup>31'</sup> versions. Upon the Bodhicaryāvatāra there are at least nine commentaries and summaries all together.<sup>32</sup> Śāntideva criticized the theory of self-consciousness (svasamvid) of mind (viññāna) from his epistemological standpoint and admitted its temporary existence without contradiction to the theory of Voidness. He was a Prāsaṅgika-Mādhyamika teacher as recognized before, but at the same time he intentionally embraced the Nirākāra-Yogācāra view of Mind.<sup>33</sup> It was a pity that the Chinese version by Thien-si-tsai (at the end of the tenth century) was read very seldom and has left little influence in later Chinese and Japanese Buddhism because of the awkwardness of the style, although Western translations of the Sanskrit original was highly welcomed in the West.<sup>34</sup>

Prajñākaramati (10th century) criticized the theory of Buddhist Idealism.<sup>40</sup>

Kambalapāda or Kambālāmbara<sup>41</sup> wrote a small metrical treatise in nine verses on the Prajñāpāramitā.<sup>42</sup> He was a contemporary with Vinītadeva.<sup>43</sup> Jñānagarbha, inheriting the standpoint of Śāntideva, developed the theory of Bodhi-mind in his work: “Yogabhāvanā-mārga”.<sup>44</sup> Advayavajra’s Mādhyama-ṣaṭka is to establish the Mādhyamika standpoint after refuting the views of Vijñānavādins and others.<sup>45</sup> Puṇyadatta (? 功德施), wrote a commentary on the Vajracchedikā-pāramitā-sūtra.<sup>46</sup>

The Mādhyamika and Vijñānavāda finally declined, even among Buddhist countries, the reason for it being still controversial.<sup>47</sup> Their thoughts are introduced sporadically in later Brahmanical and Jain works. The second chapter of the Sarvadarśanasamgraha is a good introduction to the thought of later Buddhism.<sup>48</sup> The śūnyavāda which was refuted by Kumārila in his Ślokavārttika was not exactly the Mādhyamika but rather the Vijñānavāda.<sup>49</sup>

In later days it was generally admitted that there were four major schools, i.e., the Sarvāstivādins (Vaibhāṣikas), the Sautrāntikas, the Yogācāras, and the Mādhyamikas.<sup>50</sup>

17.C.iii. Non-scholastic Texts

There are some texts which are difficult to locate exactly in the history of Buddhist thought.

The Maitreya-paripṛcchopadeśa<sup>1</sup> must have been composed after Vasubandhu.

The Trisampadā-upadeśa-sūtra-upadeśa<sup>2</sup> is a treatise on giving (dāna), precepts (śīla), and knowledge (śruta) which should be practiced by Bodhisattvas.

The Fēn-pieh-kung-tē-lun (分別功德論) Punya-vibhaṅga<sup>3</sup>? is an explanation of the Ekottarā-gama-sūtra from the viewpoint of Mahāyāna. It cites various opinions of the Sarvāstivādins and the Foreign Teachers.<sup>4</sup>

The 集大乘相論<sup>5</sup> (Mahāyānalakṣaṇasamgitiśāstra), 2 vols., of 覺吉祥智 (Buddhaśvījñāna?), translated into Chinese by 施護 is a collection of explanations on Mahāyāna technical terms.

“The Nidānakathās of Pratyekabuddhas”, (辟支佛因緣論<sup>6</sup> Anonymous, the translator unknown) is a collection of the stories of nine persons in the past who are said to have become pratyekabuddhas.

Ullaṅgha's (鬱楞迦) “Treatise on Dependent Origination” (緣生論 Nidāna or Pratitya-samutpāda-śāstra)<sup>7</sup> is a treatise in thirty verses with explanations in prose. The Sanskrit original was lost, but it was translated into Chinese by Dharmagupta in 607 A.D.<sup>8</sup> The Śilapaṭala<sup>9</sup> is a Mahāyāna work composed in 500–650 A.D. It was quoted by Jain authors.

The Bhakti-sataka,<sup>10</sup> consisting of 107 verses, is the only extant Buddhist work extolling devotional faith (bhakti). It was composed by Śrī Rāma Candrabhāratī (c. 1200–1250), a Buddhist poet, who was born in a Brahmin family in Bengal, and who came from India to Ceylon in about 1240 A.D. In this work he criticized the popular faith in Śiva, Viṣṇu, Brahman, etc. It is likely that Buddhist revival in Ceylon has something to do with this poetical work.

17.D. Social Thought

Mahāyānists expressed a political thought of their own, which can be found sporadically in some Mahāyāna texts. Some of them were written in the form of letters by priests to kings. Although Mahāyānists were not adept in political discussions, they left some political treatises as follows:<sup>1</sup>

1. Mātṛceta: Mahārāja-Kanika-Lekha<sup>2</sup>.
2. Nāgārjuna: Ratnāvali<sup>3</sup>.
3. Suḥrillekha<sup>4</sup>.
4. Maitreya-nātha: 王法正理論, 1 vol., whose Sanskrit original is lost, and which was translated into Chinese by Hsüang-tsang.<sup>5</sup>
5. The thirteenth chapter (Rājaśāstra-parivarta) of the Suvarṇa-prabhāsa-sūtra.<sup>6</sup>
6. Some passages of other six sūtras.

Equality of men also was advocated, especially in the following texts:

1. Āryadeva: Cittaviśuddhiprakaraṇa.<sup>7</sup>
2. Aśvaghōṣa: Vajrasūci.<sup>8</sup> This text, which refutes the Brahmanical caste system cuttingly and advocates equality of men, is ascribed to Aśvaghōṣa in the Sanskrit text, whereas the Chinese version<sup>9</sup> of it is ascribed to Dharmakīrti. It is likely that the main part of it was composed by Aśvaghōṣa and was enlarged gradually in later days, and finally was promulgated with the name of Dharmakīrti as the author.<sup>10</sup> The contents of the text have little to do with Mahāyāna.

Buddhist political and economic theories are ordered and amplified by Mahāyāna Buddhism<sup>11</sup> which acted in a political situation in which various major or minor kingdoms existed. In those days subjects could dethrone bad kings. Kings should carry on their rule based on the ideal of dharma. The principal virtue of the king should be clemency, towards both men and other living beings. Kings should be compassionate with their subjects. His duties are to assure the peace of the country against enemies by military force, to increase national production,<sup>12</sup> to assure social peace, and to spread education. Various political, economical and social policies are set forth. Āryadeva asserted that the prestige and authority of the king was nothing but fictional.<sup>13</sup>

In Mahāyāna also, the spiritual leaders were monks who lead an other-worldly life; they did not engage in any economic activities which were denounced by them. However, some Mahāyānists held the opinion that worldly economic life also should be of religious significance. Activities for helping others by giving some things in any way to them was greatly encouraged. Poverty should be driven away. Not all vocations were admitted as proper, as in early Buddhism. Cattle-raising and dealing of slaves and wine were forbidden.

With regard to political economy, early Buddhism occupied itself little with the problem of production, whereas, in Mahāyāna, the king was very broadly ordered to increase production, and take care of the necessities of the country in case of calamity. However, more emphasis was laid on the problem of taxation. According to the general assumptions of the time, the tribute was a service, rendered by the subjects to, or, more exactly, exacted on the subjects by, the king as a private person. The king could dispose of the fruits of taxation at will. Thus, taxation was regarded by people as a theft that the king commits, to the disadvantage of his people. Buddhists asserted that taxes should be as low as possible. Further, they placed the limit of the tax at a sixth of production. Low taxes stimulate production, which is one of the king's duties. The king should distribute his treasures to those who need them in order to make his subjects happy. This could increase the income of the king. In this way, a concept of redistributive finance was introduced.

Buddhism affronts the problem of using civil force. Its goal is to protect the needy and to maintain tranquility in the country. But to do this one must punish the guilty. How can this use of violence be justified? What is the goal of penalties? It is to correct the guilty one and put him on the right way. For this reason there should be clemency in the application of penalty. Punishment should be lenient. Death penalty was forbidden, as were other penalties which hurt the limbs of the condemned.

The highest ideal is still that of peace. But the king has the duty of protecting his subjects, and if attacked, he should throw back invaders. War is always a sin, but defensive war was more than permitted, although a pacifistic attitude should be maintained insofar as it is possible.

The king should be most diligent in administrating the state; his private life, too, must be a mirror of virtue, and, above all, he was advised to stay away from sensual enjoyments with women. He should also be assisted by good functionaries chosen and promoted according to merit. Buddhist political thought was ideologically conservative.<sup>14</sup> The Buddhist ideal of the state was characterized by an ideological conservatism so strong that one could even state that what is ancient is good. But it was virtually progressive, based upon the idealistic attitude of their religion.

<sup>12</sup> The concept of peace in Buddhism was discussed by H. Nakamura in Gendai Shūkyō Kōza (現代宗教講座 Lectures on contemporary religions), Sōbunsha, 1955; ditto: (in Eng.) "Tolerance, Peace and War, Buddhist Scripture Setting Forth a Sermon by a Jain Ascetic", in The Voice of Ahimsā, vol. 5, Nos. 1-2, Jan.-Feb. 1955; ditto: (in Eng.) in Proceeding of the UNESCO-Pax-Romana-sponsored Conference in Manila, 1960.

The goal of the state is to conduct its subjects to salvation. If the king administers the state according to divine law, he will draw down on it the divine benediction, and the state will flourish. Thus he will bring about his happiness and that of his subjects, and after his death, he will enter heaven.

Mahāyāna Buddhism accentuates above all the characteristic of altruism, with the virtue of Compassion as its spiritual foundation. Wealth was more respected than in other periods, as long as it was used. Earthly life was re-evaluated. Doing or action was esteemed as the substantial meaning of the virtue of 'giving'; if one does not do, one cannot give. But it was above all the sense of human solidarity which formed the dominant character of Buddhist thought of the time, to the point that to refuse to give alms was regarded as the greatest sin. But why should men help one another? Because a man alone does not have sufficient force for living. This is the highest meaning of Buddhist solidarity. The consciousness of solidarity of all men was emphasized.<sup>15</sup>

18. Before Dignāga<sup>1</sup>

Buddhist logic in its incipient stage can be noticed in the following works: Sandhinirmocanasūtra<sup>2</sup> (the 5th volume of the Chinese version).

Maitreya: Yogācārabhūmi<sup>3</sup>, the 15th volume of Hsüan-tsang's version. Direct perception was defined as 1) avīparokṣa, 2) anabhyūhitānabhyūhya, 3) avibhrānta in the Yogācārabhūmi.<sup>4</sup>

Asaṅga: Hsien-yang-shêng-chiao-lun.<sup>6</sup>

Vasubandhu (c. 320–400 A.D.)<sup>7</sup> is said to have written four logical works:<sup>8</sup>

1. Vādavidhi,<sup>9</sup> 2. Vādavidhāna, 3. Vādakaūsala, and 4. Tarkaśāstra.<sup>10</sup> The former three are genuine and the Tarkaśāstra also is probably by him.

<sup>9</sup> Vādavidhi is mentioned in NV. p. 117, 1.20 (cf. Randle: Fragments, p. 26, n. 2). Vādavidhāna is mentioned in the Nyāyamukha also. (ITK. vol. 5, 547.) Vādavidhānatikā (NV. 1, 1, 33, p. 117, 1.1; NVT. p. 273). Once there was an opinion that Vādavidhi is a work of Dharmakīrti. (S. C. Vidyabhushana; A. B. Keith: IHQ. IV, 1928, pp. 221 ff.) But it was wrong. It is a work by Vasubandhu. (Rangaswamy Iyengar, IHQ. 5, 1929, pp. 81 ff.; JBORS.

The Rtsod-pa sgrub-pa which is refuted in the Pramāṇasamuccaya must be the same as the Vādaiddhi. He adopted the theory of the three characteristics of reason<sup>11</sup> and laid the basis for a new Buddhist Logic. Vasubandhu was made much of in India as a logician.<sup>12</sup>

12, 1926, pp. 587 ff.; G. Tucci, IHQ. 4, 1928, pp. 630 ff.) In this work not only vāda but also pratijñā etc. were discussed. Randle: Fragments, pp. 27–28. E. Frauwallner, WZKM. 40, 1933, S. 281 f.; cf. WZKSO. Band 1, 1957, 2–44. The Vādaiddhi of Vasubandhu is examined and its fragments were collected by E. Frauwallner, WZKSO. vol. 1, 1957, 104–142. The theory of perception in the Vādaiddhi was criticized by Dignāga in the Pramāṇasamuccaya. This portion was translated into Japanese by M. Hattori in Shūkyō Kenkyū, vol. 34, No. 2 (Nr. 165), Nov. 1960, pp. 43–61. This work was discussed by E. Frauwallner in WZKSO. vol. 1, 1957, pp. 2 ff. The theory of inference in the above mentioned work was criticized by Dignāga. This portion was translated into Japanese by H. Kitagawa in Tōhōgaku, 1959, p. 143 f.

<sup>10</sup> Taishō No. 1633, translated into Chinese by Paramārtha (Taishō, vol. 32, pp. 28 ff.). The text exists in the Chinese version alone, and was restored into Sanskrit by G. Tucci (Pre-Dinnāga Buddhist Texts, pp. 1–40). H. Ui.: ITK. vol. 5, pp. 471–503. Partly translated into Japanese by Gishō Nakano, in Kokuyakuissaikyō, Ronshūbu, vol. 2. The Tarkaśāstra is not much earlier than Vasubandhu, E. Frauwallner, WZKSO. vol. 1, 1957, 143–146.

<sup>11</sup> The concept of the three characteristics of reason (hetu) was already cited as a teaching of the Nyayasūtra teacher in Asaṅga's Commentāry on the Madhyamaka-śāstra; but he did not adopt it. H. Ui assumed that it was a Chinese transcription of Nyāyasaumya (in Shūkyō kōza Ronshū, pp. 753–774; ITK. vol. 5, p. 443 f.). But Kairyū Yamamoto took it for Jains, Nyāya meaning Nāta=jñāta. (Buttan, pp. 480–488.) It was Vasubandhu who, among Buddhists, adopted the concept of the three characteristics of reason for the first time. (ITK. vol. 5, pp. 474 ff.)

a) Dignāga as a logician

Dignāga<sup>1</sup> (c. 400–485) was the founder of the Buddhist New Logic. To distinguish it from the older logic of the Nyāya school, the latter came to be called the Old Logic. He established the three-proposition syllogism, replacing the five-proposition syllogism prevalent before his time. The theory was fully established by Dignāga; it can be easily explained by classical or symbolic logic.

According to the Old Logic (of the Nyāya school) the formula of syllogism consists of:

1. proposition (pratijñā): e.g. A word (voice, śabda) is impermanent;
2. reason (hetu): Because it is produced by causes;
3. example (dr̥ṣṭānta): It is like pots;
4. application (upanaya): Pots are produced by causes and are impermanent, in the same way as a voice is also;
5. conclusion (nigamana): Therefore, a voice is impermanent.

Or the five members of syllogism are illustrated by the standing example of fire inferred from the smoke on the mountain:

- |  |   |                                    |
|--|---|------------------------------------|
| (1) Proposition ( pratijñā ):   | There is fire on the mountain(or the mountain possesses fire).                    | $\psi\alpha$                       |
| (2) Cause ( hetu ):   | For the mountain smokes.  | $\varphi\alpha$                    |
| (3) Exemplification ( dr̥ṣṭānta ):  | Wherever there is smoke there is fire, as, for example, on the hearth in the kitchen. | $(x)\varphi x \supset \psi x$      |
| (4) Recapitulation of the cause ( upanaya ):                              | The mountain smokes(or the mountain possesses smoke).                             | $\varphi\alpha \supset \psi\alpha$ |
| (5) Conclusion ( nigamana ):  | Therefore there is fire on the mountain.  | $\psi\alpha$                       |

Cf. The syllogism of Aristotle. SaM. MaP.  $\supset$  SaP.<sup>2</sup>

If this scheme is contrasted with the simple threefold syllogism of Aristotle, it is seen to be unnecessarily diffuse, since the members (4) and (5) are, in fact, only repetitions of (2) and (1).

The aim, however, of the founder of the Nyāya system was not in the least to propound the most concise form of syllogism possible; he desired to teach how best to impart to others a conviction reached by an inference.

Therefore the above-mentioned scheme of five members can be, without difficulty, accommodated to that of three, to which Westerners are accustomed.

In the threefold formula, by Dignāga, 4 and 5 are omitted. The whole scheme of syllogism is deductive, but in 3 inductive method also is implied.

The theory of the nine reasons or types of argument which are valid and invalid, were also set forth by him. All of the nine can also be easily explained by means of symbolic logic, except the fifth type which corresponds to the fallacy of irrelevant conclusion, while Dignāga defined it as inconclusive—this difference was probably due to the traditional Buddhist attitude of assuming “neither being nor non-being” as a logical mode which differs from being and from non-being.<sup>3</sup>

b) Works by Dignāga

Dignāga<sup>1</sup> wrote many treatises; among which those on logic are as follows<sup>2</sup>:

With regard to Dignāga's logic or Buddhist logic in general there have been published some works. The fundamental logical thought of Dignāga was discussed in comparison with formal logic of the West (Senshō Murakami and Kōyō Sakaino: Bukkyō Ronrigaku, Tokyo, Heigo Shuppansha, 1918). Buddhist syllogism was discussed by Shōhō Takemura, Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, No. 21, Oct. 1964, 23–40.

Dignāga's theory of perception was discussed by Stcherbatsky in Taishō Daigaku Gakuhō, April 1930, pp. 42 ff. Dignāga owed some of his ideas to Bhartrhari (H. Nakamura: Vedānta Tetsugaku no etc. pp. 25–33). Shōhō Takemura, Tetsugaku Kenkyū, No. 396, 47–62; also, IBK, vol. 3, No. 1, 255–259. Unrai Bunshū, 31 f.; 923 f. On Hsüan-tsang's scholarship of logic, cf. B. Tejima, Shūkyō Kenkyū, NS. vol. IV, No. 5, 57 f.

<sup>3</sup> Sanskrit fragments of Dignāga's works were collected and studied (S. G. Vidyabhushana: HIL, pp. 273–288; H. N. Randle: Fragments from Dinnāga, The Royal Asiatic Society, London, 1926). Some more fragments were collected, identified and translated into Japanese. H. Ui: ITK, vol. 5, pp. 505–694; H. Nakamura in S. Miyamoto: Bukkyō no Konponshinri, Tokyo, Sanseidō, 1956, pp. 299–329; Yūshō Miyasaka in IBK, vol. 6, No. 1, 1958, pp. 23–33, and translated into English by Masaaki Hattori in IBK, vol. 7, No. 1, 1958, pp. 325–330. Most of the Sanskrit fragments found by Ui and Miyasaka were reexamined by H. Nakamura in the footnotes of the Japanese translation of Tz'u-ên's Commentary on the Nyāyapravēśaka in Kokuyaku Issaikyō, 1958.

<sup>4</sup> Partial Sanskrit restoration was edited by H. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, Mysore, 1930, Mysore University Publication. Annotations on part of the text were given by S. Takemura in Ryūkoku Daigaku Ronshū, No. 351, 1956, pp. 45–61. The concept of pramāṇa-phala-vyavasthā was discussed by Y. Miyasaka in IBK, vol. 8, No. 1, 1960, pp. 43–48. Cf. Takemura in Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, No. 6, pp. 32 f.; IBK, vol. 5, No. 1, 1957, pp. 91 f. S. Ibara in Tetsugaku Nenpō (pub. by Kyūshū Univ.) No. 14, p. 101 f.; S. This text deals chiefly with forms of argumentation. This exists only in two Chinese versions by Hsüan-tsang and by I-tsing, which are not much different from each other.<sup>6</sup>

Pramāṇa-vārttika was discussed by Hiromasa Tosaki in IBK. vol. 10, No. 1, Jan. 1962, pp. 274–277. Portions were translated into Japanese by Hidenori Kitagawa in Kodaigaku, vol. 8, No. 2, pp. 176–189; Nagoya Ronshū, No. 21, March 1959, p. 57 f.; No. 24, 1960, pp. 25 ff.; No. 27, 1961, pp. 55 ff. Shōhō Takemura, Ryūkoku Daigaku Ronshū, No. 351, March 1956. The Tibetan version was restored into Sanskrit (ed. by H. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, Mysore, 1930, Mysore University Publication). The outline of the text was given by S. Takemura, Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, No. 6, 32 f. Randle: Fragments, p. 5, n. 3; pp. 6–8. The first chapter was translated into Eng. by H. Kitagawa in Bulletin of the University of Osaka Prefecture, Series C, vol. 7, May 1959, pp. 1 ff.

In the Pramāṇa-samuccaya I, Dignāga criticized the theory of perception by the Vaiśeṣikas (Masaaki Hattori in MIKiot. No. 2, Sept. 1961, pp. 23–30).

The theory of knowledge of Dignāga was fully discussed by M. Hattori in Tetsugaku Kenkyū, No. 462, pp. 34 ff.; No. 463, pp. 28 ff. The problems of word, existence and apoha were discussed by Shōren Ibara in Tetsugaku Nenpō, vol. 14. His criticism of the Mīmāṃsaka theory is set forth in the first chapter of this work. (Masaaki Hattori [in Eng.] in IBK. vol. 9, No. 2, 1961, pp. [40]–[53].) The portion of refuting the Sāṃkhya theory of perception was edited in Tibetan and translated into Eng. by M. Hattori in Bulletin of the University of Osaka Prefecture, Series C, vol. 8, May 1960. The portion refuting the theory of perception in the Vādaividhi was explained by M. ## 20. Dharmakīrti<sup>1</sup>

The logic and epistemology (really fused together) of Dignāga was elaborated by Dharmakīrti (c. 650). Among Indian and Tibetan thinkers he was regarded as the representative Buddhist philosopher. Dharmakīrti's teacher was Īsvarasena, whose theory was criticized by Dharmakīrti.<sup>2</sup> Dharmakīrti's major works are as follows:<sup>3</sup>

This is an introductory work to his logical and epistemological thought. It exists in the

E. Frauwallner: Beiträge zur Apohalehre (WZKM. XXXVII, 1930, S. 259 f.; XXXIX, 1932, S. 249 f.; XL,

This is a treatise elaborating on the thought in the Pramāṇasamuccaya. This exists in the Sanskrit original and the Tibetan version. On this work the following commentaries or explanatory works were composed and conveyed in Sanskrit:<sup>12</sup>

- a. Pramāṇavārttika-vṛtti.<sup>13</sup> The author's own commentary on the first chapter. On this commentary there is a subcommentary by Karṇakagomin.<sup>14</sup>
- b. Devendrabuddhi: Pramāṇavārttika-vṛtti. Devendrabuddhi was a disciple of Dharmakīrti. He wrote a commentary on the second through the fourth chapters of the Pramāṇavārttika. His commentary is a continuation of Dharmakīrti's own commentary, and has the same title as the one by his master (Pramāṇavārttikavṛtti).<sup>15</sup>
- c. Prajñākaragupta (c. 700): Pramāṇavārttikabhāṣya (or Vārttikālankāra).<sup>16</sup> This is a commentary on the II–IV chapters of the Pramāṇavārttika, i.e. on the chapters which Dharmakīrti himself did not write commentaries on. It includes summary verses (alankāra) by Prajñākaragupta himself.

Verses 177–183 of the pratyakṣa chapter of the Pramāṇavārttika were discussed by Hiromasa Tosaki, IBK, vol. 15, No. 2, March 1967, 265–267. S. Mookerjee and H. He admitted only six vijñānas and not ālayavijñāna. Every line denotes the relation of commenting, and every dotted line shows the relation of high esteem or citing immediately. The numbers mentioned on the highest line show the chapters of the Pramāṇavārttikakārikā, which were commented upon.

Dharmakīrti admitted only two kinds of valid knowledge, i.e. direct perception and inference, in the Pramāṇavārttika.<sup>28</sup> He asserted in the Pramāṇavārttika that in the function of manovijñāna cognition and the cognized belong to different moments. This theory was ascribed to the Sautrāntikas by others.<sup>29</sup> Dharmakīrti, in his Pramāṇavārttika, adopted the theory of realism (Sautrāntika) that conglomerations of atoms are objects of cognition from the viewpoint of daily life. This thought is shared by Bhāvaviveka also.<sup>30</sup> Dharmakīrti's theory of cause and effect was criticized by Haribhadra in his Āloka.<sup>31</sup> fragments also have been found. On this work there are two commentaries.

a. Sambandhaparikṣā-vṛtti. Dharmakīrti's own commentary.

b. Sambandhaparikṣā-tikā. A commentary by Vinītadeva.

6. Codanā-prakarāṇa. A treatise on the art of carrying on disputations.<sup>35</sup>

7. Santānāntarasiddhi. This work argues for the existence of other human existences, and sets forth a refutation of solipsism.<sup>36</sup> This exists in the Tibetan version alone.

8. Vādanyāya.<sup>37</sup> It exists only in the Tibetan version. It is reported that recently its Sanskrit manuscript has been found. There are two commentaries on it in Tibetan, the Vādanyāyatikā by Vinītadeva and the Vādanyāvṛttivipañcitārtha by Śāntarakṣita.

There, thus, are at least eight treatises of Dharmakīrti. Moreover, Praise Hymns (stotras), Tantric texts and poems<sup>38</sup> have been ascribed to him.<sup>39</sup> He is very often extolled as the greatest logician of ancient India. However, none of his works were translated into Chinese, and his philosophy was not conveyed to China nor to Japan.<sup>40</sup>

Inheriting the rationalistic attitude of Dignāga, Dharmakīrti also acknowledged perception and inference as the two sources of knowledge, and denied the authority of scriptures (argumentum ad verecundiam); but in another way, he still admitted Buddha as the source of all knowledge.<sup>41</sup>

According to Dharmakīrti, every being is transitory,<sup>42</sup> and we assume the continuous existence of an individual who is nothing but a continuation of moments and who is constructed by our imaginative and discriminative thinking (vikalpita). Objects of inference are universals, whereas objects of perception are individuals, which are nothing but moments.<sup>43</sup>

He distinguished between svabhāvānumāna (analytic inference) and kāryaliṅgakam anumānam (synthetic inference).<sup>44</sup> Svabhāva, which is the key-word of Dharmakīrti's philosophy, has two meanings. In ontological contexts svabhāva means the power of things as the principle of their being, whereas in logical contexts the word means the concept, i.e. the definite notional construct (vikalpa) that is related to real things.<sup>45</sup> The concept of svabhāva-pratibandha implies ontological basis of inference.<sup>46</sup>

He sets forth svārthānumāna and parārthānumāna.<sup>47</sup> The new form of the kṣāṇikatvānumāna is Dharmakīrti's own achievement, and there are different stages of the kṣāṇikatvānumāna with Dharmakīrti.<sup>48</sup> Non-perception (anupalabdhi) was limited to only purely epistemological significance.<sup>49</sup> His philosophy was often referred to and severely criticized by later Brahmanistic scholars.<sup>50</sup> The relation between subject and object in cognition (pramāṇa-phalavyavasthā) is a secondary one.<sup>51</sup> The theory of identity of pramāṇa and pramāṇa-phala set forth by Dignāga and Dharmakīrti seems to have derived from the Sautrāntikas.<sup>52</sup> With Dharmakīrti arthakriyā meant epistemologically 'the fulfilment of a human purpose' and ontologically 'causal power'.<sup>53</sup> The argumentation to prove the existence of God by Naiyāyikas was refuted by Dharmakīrti and his followers.<sup>54</sup> Dharmakīrti wielded great influence in later non-Buddhist logic.<sup>55</sup>

Non-perception (anupalabdhi) was limited to only purely epistemological significance. The relation between subject and object in cognition is a secondary one.

21. Logicians at the Final Stage<sup>1</sup>

Later Buddhist philosophers of the Mādhyamika and Yogācāra schools will be discussed in this section. As later logicians Śāntaraksita, Kamalaśīla (both 8th century), Śubhakarā (c. 650–750 A.D.), Dharmottara (c. 730–800 A.D.), Paṇḍita-Aśoka (9th century), Jñānaśrībhadra (c. 925), Jitāri (c. 940–980 A.D.), Vidyākaraśānti are well-known.

They were more or less engaged in logical problems such as discussed by the school of Dignāga and others. In the Prajñāpradīpa of Bhāvaviveka the old-style five-membered syllogism by earlier logicians and the new-style three-membered syllogism of Dharmakīrti were both resorted to.<sup>2</sup> Dharmapāla followed Bhāvaviveka in many respects with regard to application of logical formulas in his Śataka-kārikā-vṛtti.<sup>2'</sup>

There were Buddhist scholars and works of conspicuously logical character as follows: Śāntaraksita<sup>3</sup> and Kamalaśīla, following Dignāga's three-propositional syllogism, refuted the traditional five-propositional syllogism of the Nyāya school.<sup>4</sup> The theory of the three characteristics of reason (hetu) posed by Dharmakīrti was refuted by Pātrakesari, but the latter's theory was refuted by Śāntaraksita.<sup>5</sup> Śubhakarā (650–750 A.D.), who likely was a teacher of Dharmottara, composed a work Bāhyārthasiddhikārikā,<sup>6</sup> which aimed at proving the objective reality of external things, and thus refuting Buddhist Idealism (vijñānavāda). In those days there were many logical works.<sup>7</sup> Later major works are as follows:

Dharmottara (c. 730–800 A.D.): Apohaprakaraṇa.<sup>8</sup>

Paṇḍita-Aśoka (9th century): Avayavinirākaraṇa.<sup>9</sup>

Paṇḍita-Aśoka (9th century): Sāmānyadūṣaṇadikprasāritā.<sup>10</sup>

Jñānaśrībhadra (c. 925): Laṅkāvatāra-vṛtti Sūtrālaṅkārapīṇḍārtha.<sup>11</sup>

Jitāri (c. 940–980): (1) Jātinirākṛti.<sup>12</sup> This sets forth the controversy between Buddhism and the Vaiśeṣikas, the Mīmāṃsakas, the Jains etc. on universals (sāmānya, jāti). (2) Hetutattvopadeśa.<sup>13</sup>

Jitāri follows closely the Nyāyapraveśaka, while Vidyākaraśānti depends upon Dharmakīrti and Dharmottara.

Jñānaśrīmitra, the versatile Buddhist scholar, was born in between 975 and 1000 and flourished in the first half of the 11th century. He was a Buddhist logician of the school of Dharmakīrti at Vikramaśīla University. He left twelve treatises.<sup>15,16</sup> He wrote a work on metrics entitled Vṛttamālāstuti. Its Sanskrit original was lost, but its Tibetan version has been preserved.<sup>17</sup>

Ratnakīrti (11th century)<sup>18</sup> was a disciple of Jñānaśrīmitra at Vikramaśīla University. He left ten treatises.

Ratnakīrti:

- (1) Apoha-siddhi.<sup>19</sup>
- (2) Kṣaṇabhaṅgasiddhi. (There are two works of the same title.)
- (3) Īśvarasādhana-dūṣaṇa.
- (4) Samtānāntara-dūṣaṇa.
- (5) Sthirasiddhidūṣaṇa.<sup>20</sup>

He advocated the theory of antarvyāpti.<sup>21</sup> In his work Īśvarasādhana-dūṣaṇa Ratnakīrti proved the existence of another mind from the standpoint of the relative truth, denied it from the standpoint of the highest truth in his work Samtānāntara-dūṣaṇa (A refutation of the existence of other people's minds). This work is particularly interesting because it unreservedly declares solipsism as the final destination of idealism.<sup>22</sup>

Calcutta, 1939.) It was investigated by Y. Miyasaka (Mikkyō Bunka, Nos. 29/30, pp. 67–81). Jitāri's Hetutattvopadeśa was translated into Japanese by Yūshō Miyasaka, Mikkyō Bunka, Nos. 29/30, 57–83. A Sanskrit-Tibetan and Japanese Index to the Hetutattvopadeśa of Jitāri was compiled by Y. Miyasaka, Mikkyō Bunka, vol. 68, Sept. 1964, 31–57.

It is likely that the author of this work of metrics was the same person as the philosopher Jñānaśrīmitra in the first half of the 11th century, (op. cit. pp. 12–15).

Ratnākaraśānti (c. A.D. 1040): Antarvyāptisamarthana.<sup>23</sup> Ratnākaraśānti seems to have been a scholar of Nirākāra-vijñānavāda.<sup>24</sup>

Haribhadra (c. 1120 A.D.): Anekāntajayapatākā. It is likely that this work is based on Śākyamati's Pramāṇavārttikatikā.<sup>26</sup>

Ravigupta was a scholar who advocated Momentary Flux (kṣaṇikatva).<sup>27</sup>

The proposition sarvaṃ kṣaṇikam, sattvāt, is, according to Ratnākaraśānti, established with svabhāvahetu. This standpoint is called antarvyāptipakṣa. According to Ratnakīrti, however, whose standpoint is called bahirvyāptipakṣa, it can be established with reductio ad absurdum and reductio ad absurdum in the contrapositive form (prasaṅga-prasaṅgaviṣayābhyām). The latter is the method of pointing out a contradiction involved in the proposition: yat sat tat nityam.<sup>28</sup>

In Indian logic there was no class of judgment called 'particular proposition (judgment)'. However, it does not mean that Indian logicians did not discuss the problem of 'particular proposition'. For that purpose they used various terms, such as viśeṣaṇa, upādhi, nirūpaka and avacchedaka etc.<sup>2</sup> The distinction of the general and the particular propositions was taken into consideration by Buddhist logicians by means of the term eva.<sup>3</sup> With many Indian logicians the subjective evidence or proof of truth lay in 'coherence' (saṃvāda).<sup>4</sup>

ESOTERIC BUDDHISM

23. The Beginning

Vajrayāna ("Diamond Vehicle"),<sup>1</sup> later called Tantric Buddhism also, is Esoteric Buddhism. The place of the origin where Vajrayāna came into existence is still controversial.

(1) Shōun Toganoo: Himitsu Bukkyōshi (秘密佛教史 History of Esoteric Buddhism), 1933. Coll. Works, vol. 1. Reprinted in Gendai Bukkyō Meicho Zenshū (現代佛教名著全集), vol. 9, ed. by H. Nakamura, F. Masutani and J. M. Kitagawa. Tokyo, Ryūbunkan, Sept. 1964, pp. 1–200.

(2) Yūkei Matsunaga: Mikkyō no Rekishi (密教の歴史), Kyoto, Heirakuji-shoten, 1969.

(3) Shūyū Kanaoka: Mikkyō no Tetsugaku (密教の哲学), Kyoto, Heirakuji-shoten, 1969.

Excellent studies were carried on by the late Shōun Toganoo (梅尾祥雲 1881–1953) and published in Toganoo Shōun Zenshū (梅尾祥雲全集 Collected Works of T.S.), 5 vols., Mikkyō Bunka Kenkyūsho, Kōyasan University, Wakayama Prefecture, 1959.

Himitsu Jisō no Kenkyū (秘密事相の研究 Studies on Esoteric Rituals), 1935, Coll. Works, vol. 2.

Mikkyō Shisō to Seikatsu (密教思想と生活 Esoteric Thought and Life), 1939, Coll. Works, vol. 3.

Mandara no Kenkyū (曼荼羅の研究 Studies on Maṇḍalas), Coll. Works, vol. 4.

Rishukyō no Kenkyū (理趣経の研究 Studies on the Ardhaśatikā-prajñāpāramitā-sūtra), 1930, Coll. Works, vol. 5.

Indian Vajrayāna was discussed in Kogetsu Zenshū (pp. 642; 739 f.) and Unrai Bunshū, pp. 737 ff.

Munetada Suzuki, Himitsu Bukkyō (秘密佛教 Esoteric Buddhism), Tokyo, Meiji Shoin, 1959, 289 pp.

Seigai Ōmura, Mikkyō Hattatsushi (密教発達史 A note on the development of Esoteric Buddhism), 5 vols., Tokyo, 1923. Old, but still worth considering.

The history of Tantrism was discussed by Shōzui Toganoo, Mikkyō Bunka, No. 19, Dec. 1952, 28–45; No. 20, Dec. 1952, 20–37; No. 21, March 1953, 31–50.

Takamichi Kōjirō: Indo Mikkyōgaku Josetsu (インド密教学序説). This is a Japanese translation of Benoytosh Bhattāchārya's An Introduction to Buddhist Esoterism, 1932, with critical notes by Yūkei Matsunaga and Shingen Takagi. Published by the Mikkyō Bunka Kenkyūsho, Kōyasan University, Wakayama, March 1962. 42 + 330 + 36pp. In an appendix to it there is a detailed bibliography of works, both Japanese and Western, on Esoteric Buddhism.

Some scholars say that it originated in Vaṅga and Samatāṭa and then it spread to other places of India.<sup>2</sup> However, an opinion has it that it is not to Bengal and Assam but to the Swat Valley (Uḍḍiyāna) in the north and Dhānyakāṭaka, Śrīparvata and Potalaka Parvata in the South, that we have to look for the original homes of Tantric Buddhism.<sup>3</sup>

The religious rites of Vajrayāna are derived largely from those of the Vedic religion.<sup>4</sup> Even in Traditional, Conservative Buddhism (Hīnayāna), there were early indications of Esoteric Buddhism. Already in Early Buddhism we find a form of Esoteric Buddhism in its incipient stage, especially in the Mahasamayāsuttanta and the Āṭānāṭiya-suttanta of the Dīghanikāya.<sup>5</sup> Strange to say, some formulas expressing the Four Noble Truths (catvāry āryasatyāni) in Dravidian languages were used as a sort of a dhāraṇī by the Sarvāstivādins, owing to the belief in satyakriyā which was supposed to be empirically effective among Indians in general.<sup>6</sup> Most of the Parittas were incorporated in the Mahāmāyūrī, an Esoteric text.<sup>7</sup> However, Esoteric Buddhism incorporated Vedic and Hindu beliefs to a much greater extent.

Later religious practices of India, such as the Buddhist Tantra, have a profound debt to the Vedic religion.<sup>8</sup> To illustrate, the rite of homa was adopted by Esoteric Buddhists in a modified way. Homa means 'to put offerings in a fire for worship', formerly practiced by Brahmins. According to Esoteric Buddhists, the practice of the rites of the External homa fulfills worldly desires, whereas that of the Internal homa purifies one's own mind.<sup>9</sup> Some texts describing the ritual of homa were compiled.<sup>10</sup> Esoteric Buddhism adopted various forms of popular Hindu belief into its own system.<sup>11</sup> Totemic beliefs are also incorporated in Buddhist tantras.<sup>12</sup> The Introduction to the Vajrapāṇi-abhiṣeka-mahātantra which exists in Tibetan alone, shows the local yakṣa, taken on by Śākyamuni as travelling companion, promoted to a Buddhist high-rank.<sup>13</sup> Vajrapāṇi<sup>14</sup> was promoted to the role of the central figure in Esoteric Buddhism.<sup>15</sup> In some later caves (4–6th Centuries A.D.) at Ajantā, statues of Jambhala (Kubera) are put side by side with those of Śākyamuni.<sup>16</sup> This is an example of Hindu influence on Buddhism.

Many Hindu gods and semi-gods were adopted into the Buddhist pantheon, and new deities were coined, based upon them. The figure of Yamāntaka in Vajrayāna developed from Yama or Antaka and Durgā.<sup>17</sup>

Needless to say, Śākyamuni was worshipped, and his attaining Enlightenment was glorified, but the worship of the founder of Buddhism came to be mingled with popular Hindu beliefs, as in the Māravijaya-stotra,<sup>18</sup> which extols his conquering demons before his Enlightenment.

One of the features unique of Esoteric Buddhism was the recitation of Dhāraṇīs.<sup>19</sup> The Dhāraṇīs, or "Protective Spells", constitute a large and important part of Mahāyāna texts. Common people of those days cherished incantations, benedictions, and magic spells so much that Buddhism could not dispense with them. The adoption of these formulas could only be excused by the explanation that Dhāraṇīs were the means for mental concentration.<sup>20</sup> From about the 4th century on, independent sūtras of Vajrayāna were composed.<sup>21</sup> The “Sūtra on the Dhāraṇī for Protecting Children”<sup>22</sup> is one of them. The Uṣṇīṣa-vijaya-dhāraṇī,<sup>23</sup> which has been handed down, written on palm leaves, to the Hōryūji Temple of Nara, consists of a series of nonsensical invocations, although they are very symbolical. Its influence can be noticed throughout Asia. To illustrate, the gate Chū-yung-kuan in Northern China is a monument inaugurated in the year 1345 by a Sas-kya Hierarch: Nam mkhaḥ rgyal mtshan. It is decorated with a style which is, in a certain way, a confluence of Chinese and Tibetan art. On this gate the two dhāraṇīs, Uṣṇīṣavijaya and the Sarvatathāgatahṛdaya-samayavilokita were written in a larger script.<sup>24</sup> The Mantra of Light, which originated in India, became very popular in Japan.<sup>25</sup>

There are texts<sup>26</sup> which extoll the mantra of the Ekākṣara-buddhoṣṇīṣa-cakra<sup>27</sup> and its seed bhrūm. The Uṣṇīṣa-cakra-varti-tantra<sup>28</sup> teaches the rituals of courting of lovers, of conquering enemies, of obtaining longevity, etc. In esoteric Buddhism there is a group of sūtras for the purpose of invoking longevity.<sup>29</sup> Being, so to speak, the Atharva-veda in a Buddhist setting, it represents a stage of mixed Vajrayāna prior to systematized Vajrayāna. The Mahāpratisarā dhāraṇī was also esteemed.<sup>30</sup> The Mahā-pratyāṅgirā-dhāraṇī<sup>31</sup> and the Vasundhārā-dhāraṇī<sup>32</sup> are other spells of a similar sort.

The (Sarva) Tathāgatoṣṇīṣa-sitātapatrā-nāma-aparājitā Mahāpratyāṅgirā (vidyārājñī), or (Mahā) Pratyāṅgirā-dhāraṇī was popular from the 5–6th to the 18th century A.D. not only in India, but more in the outside world. The aim of this Dhāraṇī is as follows: “This ‘invincible white-umbrella one’ goddess, having been attributed lots of qualities, is described as the destroyer had a close relation to what was called the Vidyādhara-piṭaka.<sup>67</sup> The Guhya-tantra<sup>68</sup> is another one of them. The Susiddhikarasūtra<sup>69</sup> describes the ways to make rituals effective. This text was influential among Japanese Esoteric Buddhists.<sup>70</sup> There are several lines of transmission of the Kalpa based on the Susiddhikara-mahātantra-sādhanopāyika-pāṭala.<sup>70'</sup> These sūtras seem to have been influential on the process of compiling the Mahāvairocana- and Vajrasekhara-sūtra.<sup>71</sup>

There appeared a number of magic sūtras which might be termed the "Peacock Incantation Sūtras".<sup>41</sup> The Mahāmāyūrī-sūtra<sup>42</sup> had its origin in the Ātānāṭiyasutta, a sacred book of Early Buddhism.<sup>43</sup> By a critical examination of the geographical catalogue of the sūtra, S. Lévi proved that this was compiled in the third or the fourth centuries A.D.<sup>44</sup>

The Mātāṅgī-sūtra, also, is important as a predecessor of Vajrayāna magical formulas.<sup>52</sup> This sūtra,<sup>53</sup> translated into Chinese in the third century, was most likely compiled in Samarkand, judging from its astronomical informations.<sup>54</sup> A magical formula invoking for rain, growth of vegetation etc. to Mātāṅgī is enjoined in Esoteric Sūtras (e.g. Taishō, No. 951, vol. 19, p. 256 a; 217 b, etc.)<sup>55</sup>

As for the Kāraṇḍavyūha-sūtra,<sup>72</sup> it is possible that its verse part existed before the fourth<sup>73</sup> century, while its prose part came into being some time before the sixth century. It extolls the majestic power of Avalokiteśvara and explains his mantra: Oṃ mani padme hūm.

The Mañjuśrī-mūla-kalpa<sup>74</sup> describes itself as a Mahā-vaipulya-mahāyāna-sūtra, and as belonging to the Avatamsaka; but the contents are in the spirit of the Mantrayāna. In the fourth and the following chapters of this sūtra Śākyamuni gives Mañjuśrī instructions on magic rites with Mantras, Mudrās, Maṇḍalas, etc., whereas in the first through third chapters Mañjuśrī himself delivers sermons.<sup>75</sup> It is likely that the first three chapters were composed afterwards and were added to the original portion later.<sup>76</sup> The Rājavyākaraṇa-parivarta, the 53rd chapter of the Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa was composed in the middle of the 8th century in the reign of Gopāla, the first king of the Pāla dynasty.<sup>77</sup>

The origin of the Vajrapānyabhiseka-sūtra is earlier than the Vairocanābhisambodhi-sūtra, and the former can be assigned to the beginning of the seventh century, whereas it is generally held that the Vairocanābhisambodhi-sūtra must be assigned to the middle of the 7th century.<sup>78</sup>

The Prajñāpāramitā thought came to be combined with Vajrayāna ideas. This fact is best exemplified in the case of Prajñāpāramitā-naya-śatapañcāsatikā, Rishukyō, the most widely accepted scripture in Japanese Vajrayāna. (This scripture is discussed in the section of “Wisdom Sūtras”.) In later versions of some Mahāyāna sūtras phrases of Esoteric Buddhism came to be inserted, as in the case of the original of the Vimalakīrti-nirdeśa-sūtra translated by Hsüan-tsang, where we find such terms as ‘hidden meaning’ (sandhi) inserted.<sup>79</sup>

24. Systematization

Esoteric Buddhism was systematized in the Mahā-Vairocana-sūtra and the Diamond Peak Sūtra; and both became the two principal scriptures of Chinese and Japanese Esoteric Buddhism. Some scholars believe that both were composed in Nālandā in the latter half of the 7th century A.D.<sup>1</sup>

The Buddhism based on these two Tantric scriptures is generally called "Mantra-yāna" by some scholars, from which all other offshoots, such as Vajrayāna, Kālacakra-yāna, Sahaja-yāna, etc. arose in later times, and which has constituted the framework of Chinese and Japanese Esoteric Buddhism.<sup>2</sup> These two scriptures, although they are called sūtras in the Sanskrit version, are definitely classified as Tantas (Tibetan: rgyud) by Tibetans, because these two sūtras have distinctively Tantric features.

is a ritual work based on the Mahāvairocana-sūtra.] In this sūtra various syllables are enumerated, and esoteric meanings are ascribed to each of them.<sup>17</sup> There are twenty syllables representing various virtues of Mahāvairocana<sup>18</sup> Tathāgata.<sup>19</sup>

The One Hundred and Sixty Minds, which is the essential theme of the First Chapter of the Vairocanābhisambodhi-tantra, represents various aspects of the mind of a religious practitioner.<sup>20</sup> The Mahāvairocanasūtra, chapter V presupposes the four aṅgas for japa which had been systematized before the sūtra.<sup>21</sup> The feature of assimilation is most conspicuous in Esoteric Buddhism.<sup>22</sup> Vajrayāna admits the Fourfold Truth-Body (the ordinary trikāya and nisyanda-kāya).<sup>23</sup>

The conception of bodhicitta in Mahāyāna and in Vajrayāna is not uniform. The term had one simple meaning in the Mahāyāna texts and its meaning became complex in Vajrayāna texts. What was a mental stage of a bodhisattva's career in Mahāyāna, became the goal of striving and the final stage of spiritual life in Vajrayāna.<sup>24</sup> The term 'non-attachment' (Mushojū 無所住) in the Vajracchedikā-sūtra was explained away as a positive concept in Chinese and Japanese Vajrayāna.<sup>25</sup>

Some passages of the Sanskrit text were discussed by Shinten Sakai and Shindō Shiraishi in Mikkyō Bunka, Nos. 41–42, Nov. 1958, pp. 1–20. All existing commentaries on the Diamond Peak Sūtra were enumerated by Yoshiyuki Manabe in Yajña, No. 7, 1960, pp. 50–58.

The "Diamond Peak Sūtra (金剛頂經)" is the title of this sūtra commonly used in China and Japan, but it should be distinguished from the Vajrasekhara-mahāguhyayogatantra, (Tōhoku, No. 480), which is the second or third section of the Diamond Peak Sūtra, being the explanatory tantra of the first section of the Diamond Peak Sūtra. The Five-class Hindu Deities (五類諸天) in the Sarva-tathāgata-tattvasaṅgraha-sūtra were examined by Yukio recognized that it appeared in South India later than the Mahāvairocana-sūtra.<sup>27</sup> Nāga-bodhi<sup>28</sup> of South India is said to be its writer, or if not, at least the man who completed it.<sup>29</sup> It came into existence some time between 680–690.<sup>30</sup> The practice of the Fivefold Meditation to achieve the body of Mahāvairocana (五相成身觀) is set forth in the first section of this sūtra.<sup>31</sup> Also in this sūtra the '37 Devatā-utpatti' is described, and in connection with it the Four Abhiṣeka Methods are enjoined.<sup>32</sup> The XIIIth section<sup>33</sup> of the Diamond Peak Sūtra is based on a vidhi whose Chinese translation is 祕密三昧大教王經.<sup>34</sup>

The Sarvatathāgata-tattva-saṃgraha-mahāyāna-abhisamaya-mahākālpa-rāja<sup>35</sup> is said to be an abridgment of the first section of the Diamond Peak Sūtra.<sup>36</sup> But another scholar says that it is likely that it is an anthology of the larger version of the Diamond Peak Sūtra.<sup>37</sup> There are minor texts setting forth rituals relevant to this sūtra.<sup>38</sup> The Mahāsamaya-kālpa-rāja

The appearance of the 37 Divine Beings in rituals is explained in the following two texts: 金剛頂瑜伽三十七尊出生義, Taishō, No. 872, wrongly ascribed to Amoghavajra. This was translated into Japanese by R. Kanbayashi in KIK. Mikkyōbu, vol. 3. It aims at saying that the Vajrasekhara-sūtra was taught after the Saddharma-puṇḍarīka-sūtra. It was compiled by some Chinese.

or Tattva-saṃgraha-tantra (the abbreviation of the above) is a very important text for Japanese Esoteric Buddhists.<sup>39</sup>

Avalokiteśvara was especially invoked to dispel the calamities of suffering people,<sup>41</sup> and to confer happiness on them. The earliest form of homa ritual first appears in the Avalokiteśvaraikādaśa-mukha-dhāraṇī (an Invocation to the Eleven-Head Avalokiteśvara),<sup>42</sup> and later, in the "Sūtra of Auspicious Incantations".<sup>43</sup> The Amogha-pāśa-kalparāja-sūtra<sup>44</sup> was written on the basis of the Avalokiteśvaraikādaśa-mukha-dhāraṇī,<sup>45</sup> adding thereto passages selected from the Vajrasekhara-, the Larger Prajñāpāramitā-, the Mahāvairocana-, sūtras and the Abridged Invocation Sūtra,<sup>46</sup> etc.<sup>47</sup> Six or seven figures of Avalokiteśvara finally came to be worshipped. Cuṇḍī, one of them, became very popular.<sup>48</sup> The Eleven-Headed Avalokiteśvara and the Thousand-Handed Avalokiteśvara also were worshipped.<sup>49</sup> The figure of the Horse-Head<sup>50</sup> Avalokiteśvara was derived from a legend in the Valāhassa Jātaka.<sup>51</sup>

金剛頂經一字頂輪王瑜伽一切時處念誦成佛儀軌, Taishō, No. 957, translated into Chinese by Amoghavajra in 746–774 A.D. This was translated into Japanese by Yūsei Abe in KIK. Mikkyōbu, vol. 5. It consists only of kārikās.

<sup>39</sup> It has three Chinese versions. Prof. G. Tucci found a Sanskrit manuscript of this text in Nepal, and published one chapter of it: Indo-Tibetica (pp. 135–140) with his Italian translation (pp. 140–145). Shinten Sakai identified it in the Tibetan and Chinese Tripiṭakas, Taishō, No. 882, and published a Japanese translation of it (Mikkyō Bunka, Nos. 41 and 42, Jan. 1959). Tucci's edition was emended and discussed by S. Sakai and Shindō Shiraishi (in Eng.) in IBK, vol. 7, No. 2, March 1959, p. 728 f.

<sup>44</sup> 不空羂索神變真言經, Taishō, No. 1092, vol. 20, p. 227 f. There are five Chinese versions. R. Yamada: Bongo Bulletin, p. 157. One version 不空羂索陀羅尼自在王呪經, 3 vols., Taishō, No. 1097, translated into Chinese by 寶思惟 (Ratnacinta? or Ratnacetana? or Ratnasamkalpa?) in 639 A.D., was translated into Japanese by Yūsei Abe in KIK. Mikkyōbu, vol. 5. The Sanskrit text was edited by R. O. Meisezahl in Monumenta Nipponica, vol. XVII, 1962, Nos. 1–4, pp. 265–328. Cf. a remark by J. W. de Jong, IJ, vol. XV, No. 1, 1973, p. 62.

R. O. Meisezahl: Amoghapāśa. Some Nepalese Representations and Their Vajrayānic Aspects, Monumenta Serica, vol. XXVI, 1967, pp. 455–497. (Discussions with various plates.)

The Significance of the Amoghapāśadhāraṇī in the Spiritual Life of the Japanese was discussed by H. Nakamura (in Eng.) in Monumenta Nipponica, XVII, 1962, pp. 265–266. The fact that the Amogharāja-kalpa-sūtra frequently makes reference to the Mahāvairocana-sūtra means that it was composed after the latter, after which the Diamond Peak Sūtra was probably composed.

Another sūtra (聖觀自在菩薩梵讚) was restored into Sanskrit. Baron A. von Staël-Holstein: On two recent reconstructions of a Sanskrit hymn transliterated with Chinese characters in the X century A.D. The Yenching Journal of Chinese Studies, XVII, Peking 1934.

The Parnaśabari-dhāraṇī is relevant to the worship of Avalokiteśvara in another figure.<sup>52</sup> “Parnaśabari” means ‘Śabari clad in Leaves of Trees’. Parnaśabari was originally a goddess of epidemics and disasters. Later it was introduced into Esoteric Buddhism.<sup>53</sup> A Buddhist Goddess, she was śakti developed from Mother Goddess and introduced into Buddhism. Conflation of different divine beings was conspicuous.

Amitābha and Avalokiteśvara were identified.<sup>54</sup> Avalokiteśvara came to be combined with figures of Śiva, and dhāraṇīs such as the Nilakanṭha-dhāraṇī<sup>55</sup> were composed.

Mañjuśrī also received devout faith from his worshippers.<sup>55'</sup> The Nāma-saṃgīti is collections of invocations to him.<sup>56</sup> Originally, repetition of names of Buddhas and Bodhisattvas is encouraged in the Nāmasaṃgīti. Nāmasaṃgīti itself became a deity in Vajrayāna.<sup>57</sup> The Ārya-mañjuśrī-nāmāṣṭa-śataka<sup>58</sup> also extolls his virtues. The Mañjuśrī-bodhisattva-maṅgalagāthā<sup>59</sup> was translated neither into Chinese, nor into Tibetan, but was conveyed by Chinese transliteration. In the Sarvatathāgatādhiṣṭhāna-sattvāvalokana-buddhakṣetrasandarśana-vyūha<sup>60</sup> (or Sarvatathāgatajñāna-bodhisattva-bhūmi-kramaṇa) Avalokiteśvara and Mañjuśrī are the principal figures extolling dhāraṇīs.

The Shou-hu-kuo-chieh-chu-dhāraṇī-ching,<sup>61</sup> which exists only in the Chinese version, expresses the idea of protecting the state.<sup>62</sup> This sūtra seems to have been composed after the Mahāvairocana-sūtra.<sup>63</sup> About two-third of it is closely identical with the whole of the

Āryadhāraṇīsvararājasūtra.<sup>64</sup> And these texts have a close connection with the tathāgata-garbha thought expressed in the Ratnagotra-vibhāga.<sup>65</sup> The Dhāraṇīs for protecting kings are extolled in this text, and were esteemed in Japan. The figure of the king in Chinese versions of Esoteric Buddhist scriptures was influenced by the traditional Chinese concept of the Emperor.<sup>66</sup>

Vows were required of Vajrayāna ascetics also. In the Bodhicitta-śilādānakalpa,<sup>72</sup> compiled by Samantabhadra, the Yoga teacher, vows of Vajrayānists are prescribed. The compiler seems to be Master I-hsing.<sup>73</sup> In the "Essentials of Meditation" by Master Śubhakarasiṃha<sup>74</sup> they are cited. In the Vinaya-sūtra<sup>75</sup> the word 'discipline' (vinaya) was interpreted as meaning to control the six organs and not to create things in the objective world. In this text it virtually means secret dhāraṇīs. Master-disciple relationship was highly esteemed in Vajrayāna.<sup>76</sup>

On some robes of Japanese Buddhist monks Sanskrit characters were represented.<sup>80</sup> In Japan there have been found at least 68 inscriptions of Sanskrit letters (bījas) on rocks throughout the country.<sup>81</sup> Stūpas came to represent the essence or reality of the universe in Esoteric symbolism.<sup>82</sup>

In connection with Esoteric symbolism, there are two kinds of Sanskrit syllables, one consisting of 42 letters, the other consisting of 50 letters. The former is based on the order of Sanskrit alphabet, whereas the latter was formed on a-ra-pa-ca-na, the mantra of Mañjuśrī.<sup>83</sup> The former is explained in the akṣara-mātrkā-vyākhyā-varga<sup>84</sup> of the Diamond Peak Sūtra, whereas the latter is explained in the Śrī-Vajramāṇḍalāṅkāra-mahātantrarāja.<sup>85</sup>

Śrī-Vajra-maṇḍalāṅkāra-mahātantrarāja is a text analogous to the Prajñāpāramitā-naya-sūtra.<sup>86</sup>

In Mahāyāna in general the Cosmic Body of Buddha is beyond figure and conception. It is Truth as such. But in Esoteric Buddhism the Cosmic Body is in action. The six elements of the universe are nothing but the Cosmic Body of the Effulgent One (Mahāvairocana).<sup>87</sup> In Mahāyāna it had nothing to do with sermons. But in Esoteric Buddhism it has figures and forms, and even goes so far as to deliver sermons.<sup>88</sup> The five elements (mahābhūtāni), which constitute human existence, were explained in the Mahāvairocana-sūtra as symbols representing Original Enlightenment.<sup>89</sup>

Esoteric Buddhists made use of maṇḍalas.<sup>90</sup> Maṇḍalas are systematically arranged configurations of pictures of Buddhas and Bodhisattvas, and represent a symbolical significance of meritorious deeds. Maṇḍalas were used as the object of meditation to elevate the follower to the realization of ultimate reality. The term 'maṇḍala' was used already in Early Buddhism, but it meant only a platform made of mud for conferring the Code of Disciplines on disciples. It had nothing to do with figures of Buddhas and Bodhisattvas.<sup>91</sup> In Esoteric Buddhism, however, it acquired great significance, and the configurations of figures developed to a remarkable extent. There are several types of maṇḍalas in Vajrayāna. Especially after the sixth century, they were elaborated.<sup>92</sup>

The primitive form of the Karuṇā-garbha-dhātu Maṇḍala is evident in the Mahāvairocana-sūtra.<sup>93</sup> Garbha literally means the 'womb', and the triangular sign of the maṇḍala derived from the worship of the female sex-organ.<sup>94</sup> Some texts were composed for the purpose of showing how to establish maṇḍalas.<sup>95</sup> A special maṇḍala was formed based upon the Prajñāpāramitā-naya-sūtra.<sup>96</sup> Śrī-Vajramāṇḍalālamkāra-nāma-mahātantrarāja was composed, basing itself on the Ardhaśatikā-prajñāpāramitā.<sup>97</sup> Later theologians gave more philosophical explanations<sup>98</sup> of them.

The T'ang priest Hui-kuo (746–805 A.D.) made a presentation of a set of two Maṇḍalas (Maṇḍalas of the Two Circles) to Master Kūkai (Kōbō Daishi), consisting of a pair of hanging scrolls representing Garbhadhātu and Vajradhātu. But the Mantrayāna prior to Hui-kuo had kept the two Maṇḍalas which comprised a great many Buddhas, Bodhisattvas, and deities. The figures of all these have become clear.<sup>99</sup>

A Karuṇā-garbhadhātu Maṇḍala inscription on a stone statue of Mahāvairocana-Buddha was found in Japan. It consists of Sanskrit letters, each of which represents a seed (bīja). This seems to have been inscribed in the 12th or 13th century A.D.<sup>100</sup>

The counterpart of the Karuṇā-garbhadhātu Maṇḍala is the Vajradhātu Maṇḍala. Vajra means "diamond", and this maṇḍala represents the male aspects of the Cosmic Body of Mahāvairocana Buddha. The Thirty Seven Divine Beings<sup>101</sup> of the Vajradhātu were systematized in China, although each of them was thought of already in India.<sup>102</sup>

In later Esoteric Buddhism the Karuṇā-garbhadhātu Maṇḍala and the Vajradhātu Maṇḍala came to be esteemed as the two principal maṇḍalas being objects of meditation.<sup>103</sup>

The use of the maṇḍala to Cover the Dead Body which was prevalent in ancient Japan can be traced to later Upaniṣads in India.<sup>104</sup>

Mantras or dhāraṇīs were used with detailed instructions of the use of certain positions of the fingers (mudrās).<sup>105</sup> They should be investigated in connection with mudrās of Indian dancing.

Consecration by sprinkling water (abhiṣeka), widely practiced in Brahmanism since the Atharva-Veda, was introduced into Esoteric Buddhism,<sup>106</sup> and became an important ritual.<sup>107</sup> The greatest secret ritual in Japanese Esoteric Buddhism has been said to be Daigenhō (大元帥法), at which the essential object of worship is Daigen Myōō (大元帥明王), whose Sanskrit original is Āṭavaka.<sup>108</sup> Rituals were elaborated.<sup>109</sup> The Vajraśekhara yoga Homavidhi<sup>110</sup> was composed based upon the Vajraśekhara tantra.<sup>111</sup> There are several other Homavidhis.<sup>112</sup>

The final state which a person can obtain is called "Siddhi" (Perfection), or mysterious powers; and one becomes a Siddha, "an accomplished one". There are Three Perfections, i.e., those in body, speech and mind. One text<sup>113</sup> aims at conquering the obstacles by demons (māras) and attaining Three Perfections by mercy of Vairocana Buddha. Śubhakarasiṃha, after coming to China, adopted some Chinese thought, and connecting some Chinese theories<sup>114</sup> with the Five Character Mantra,<sup>115</sup> set forth the Three Perfections.<sup>116</sup>

In the period of systematization esoteric theologians appeared. Among them Nāgārjuna<sup>117</sup> is the best known. In Esoteric Buddhism of China and Japan he has been regarded as the founder of the Esoteric (Shingon) sect. It is likely that he was another person from the philosopher of the same name. The P'u-t'i-hsin-lun,<sup>118</sup> traditionally ascribed to Nāgārjuna, is thought to have been composed after 700 A.D. This text was very important in Japanese Esoteric Buddhism.<sup>119</sup> After Nāgārjuna Nāgabodhi was influential. His date is not known, but he became to be known after Vajrabodhi (8th century).<sup>120</sup>

25. The Final Stage<sup>1</sup>

In later days Esoteric Buddhism was greatly influenced by the religion of Tantras, which was a new trend of Hinduism.<sup>2</sup> This new form of Buddhism is called the Mantrayāna by some scholars, the “vehicle” in which the Mantras, words and syllables of mysterious power, are the chief means of attaining salvation. It is distinguished from older Esoteric Buddhism, Vajrayāna, the “Diamond Vehicle”, which leads men to salvation by using all things which are denoted by the word ‘vajra’ (diamond). But there is no rigid boundary-line between them both. The intention of tantras was<sup>3</sup> to relate them to designated fruits. The memorial syllables have no meaning in the ordinary sense; their meaning is in what they intend by way of the respective associations.

There are four classes of Buddhist Tantras:

- (1) Kriyā-tantras, which treat the ceremonies at the building of temples, erection of images of gods, etc.;
- (2) Caryā-tantras, which teach the practical cult;
- (3) Yoga-tantras, which deal with the practice of Yoga, and
- (4) Anuttara-yoga-tantras, which deal with higher mysticism.<sup>4</sup>

In the work Lta-baḥi rim-pa bsad-pa (Drṣṭi-krama-nirdeśa) Dpal-brtsegs (c. 780–820 A.D.) classified all the tantras into five classes: (1) kriyā-tantra, (2) yoga-tantra, (3) mahāyoga-tantra, (4) anuyoga-tantra and (5) atiyoga-tantra.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The features of the final stage were discussed by Shūki Yoshimura in Ryūoku Daigaku Bukkyō Bunka Kenkyūsho Kiyō, No. 3, pp. 58–70; by Yūkei Matsunaga in Mikkyō Bunka, Nos. 53 and 54, pp. 110–134.

The term Mantrayāna is used by some scholars, e.g. Winternitz II, pp. 385–387; 397; 400. However, Prof. Y. Matsunaga is against such a distinction between Vajrayāna and Mantrayāna. In the Japanese tradition all Esoteric Buddhism is called Vajrayāna (金剛乘). Some Western scholars also call later Esoteric Buddhism ‘Vajrayāna’, e.g. G. Tucci, Tibetan Painted Scrolls, pt. I; H. v. Glasenapp, Buddhistische Mysterien, Stuttgart, 1940. I have adopted the distinction between these two appellations only for the reason that the Vajrayāna conveyed to China and Japan is quite different from later Esoteric Buddhism of India and Tibet, which we had better call with another appellation. <sup>2</sup> S. Dasgupta: Introduction to Tantric Buddhism (Calcutta, 1950) brought some new aspects which Japanese scholars did not know. (It was introduced by Kanyū Kabese in IBK, vol. 6, No. 2, March 1958, p. 96.) Alex Wayman: The Buddhist Tantras. Light on Indo-Tibetan Esotericism, New York, Samuel Weiser, 1973. (This is a pioneering work which gives us a new insight into the field. Fully documented.) Reviewed by Shinjo Kawasaki, IBK, vol. 23, No. 2, March 1970, pp. 459–462. Tantric influence was discussed in Kogetsu Zenshū, p. 274 f.; Kawahara in Mikkyō Bunka, No. 7, p. 56 f. The problems in the above-mentioned work were fully discussed by Shashibhusan Dasgupta in his Obscure Religious Cults (Firma K. L. Mukhopadhyay, Calcutta, revised ed. 1962), i+436 pp. Malati J. Shendge: The Literary Forms of Tantras, Transactions of the International Conference of Orientalists in Japan, No. XI, 1966, 37–46 (in English).

Another classification is possible in terms of form, although not exactly systematized:<sup>6</sup>

- 1) Mūla-tantra.
- 2) Laghu-tantra or Alpa-tantra. A laghutāntra is the uddeśa ('enumeration') of the subject matter and a mūla-tantra is the nirdeśa ('explanation') of the uddeśa.
- 3) Ākhyāta-tantra. Explanatory of another tantra.
- 4) Uttara-tantra. Commentarial.
- 5) Uttarottara-tantra. Placed after uttara-tantra and also commentarial.

Among Kriyā-tantras, the Ādikarma-pradīpa<sup>7</sup> is well-known. This is a work which, in the style of the Brahmanical manuals of ritual (Grhya-sūtra, etc.) describes the ceremonies and religious acts which the Mahāyāna candidate for enlightenment has to perform. Among the Anuttara-yoga-tantras, the Māyājāla-tantra<sup>8</sup> represents a transitory period from the Yoga group scriptures, beginning with the Tattvasaṃgraha-tantra, to the Guhyasamāja, which is representative of the Anuttarayoga group scriptures.<sup>9</sup> The Āryopāya-pāśa-padma-mālā<sup>10</sup> is an old Tantric text representing the Anuttarayoga.

One of the features of the Mantrayāna was the justification of sexual desire. Already in Mahāyāna there was a tendency to purify sexual desire to lead men to enlightenment.<sup>11</sup> The mithuna (sexual pleasure) scenes were pleurably represented already in the third century A.D. at Nāgārjunikoṇḍa.<sup>12</sup> In Ajantā, also, we notice similar scenes. The element became very strong in later Esoteric Buddhism.

The Guhyasamāja-tantra, the most profound of Buddhist Tantras,<sup>13</sup> came into existence

Kanbayashi in KIK, Mikkyōbu, vol. 4. The title is Śri-sarva-tathāgata-kāya-vāk-citta-rahasyād vinirgata Śri-Guhyasamājatāntra. L. M. Joshi, The Tathāgataguhyasūtra and the Guhyasamāja-tantra, JOI, vol. XV, No. 2, Dec. 1966, 138-143. Formerly the Guhyasamāja was identified with the Tathāgataguhyaka by the former editors (cf. M. Winternitz: Gesch. d. ind. Lit. II, S. 274), but it was wrong. They are different sūtras. (Y. Matsunaga in Nakano Comm. Vol., p. 195.)

Recently this text was analyzed in full detail by Alex Wayman in his Yoga of the Guhyasamājatāntra. The Arcane Lore of Forty Verses. A Buddhist Tantra Commentary, Delhi etc., Motilal Banarsidass, 1977. The title Guhyasamājatāntra can be interpreted in various ways. (Alex Wayman: Guhyasamājatāntra; Reflections on the Word and its Meaning, Transactions of the International Conference of Orientalists in Japan, No. XV, 1970, 36-44.) Historical significance of this sūtra, discussed by Alex Wayman in his The Buddhist Tantras. Light on Indo-Tibetan Esotericism, New York, Samuel Weiser, 1973, pp. 12-23. Some important problems of this sūtra were discussed by Jitsudō Nagasawa in Chizan Gakuhō, No. 5, Feb. 1956, pp. 12-41.

before 750,<sup>14</sup> and probably before the sixth century.<sup>15</sup> Other scholars hold that, although the sūtra appeared in its incipient stage around 750 A.D., the date of the compilation of the Guhyasamāja-tantra is about 800 A.D.<sup>16</sup> It was a production of Esoteric Buddhism at its last stage, containing a description of ugly and strange rites and ceremonies.<sup>17</sup> According to some scholars, the Guhyasamāja-tantra, consisting of 18 sections, is divided in the mūla tantra,<sup>18</sup> i.e. the first 17 sections, and the Uttara-tantra, i.e. the 18th section,<sup>19</sup> both of which were composed and put together as a single sūtra around 800 A.D.<sup>20</sup> The Guhyasamāja sets forth the four ways of practice, i.e. sevā, upasādhana, sādhana and mahā-sādhana.<sup>21</sup> This text is mixed with various popular beliefs of Hinduism. Prayers to subdue Aparājita, the ferocious one, are set forth.<sup>22</sup> It can be expounded by shedding light on its relation with previous literature including the Brahmanical tradition.<sup>23</sup>

The Guhyasamāja-tantra has another title: Tathāgata-guhyaka. An opinion has it that originally there was a Mahāyāna vaipulya sūtra called Tathāgataguhyā-sūtra or Tathāgatā-cintyaguhyānirdeśa and the Guhyasamāja-tantra is a Vajrayāna text of much later period.<sup>24</sup> In the Guhyasamāja-tantra a remarkable definition of bodhicitta<sup>25</sup> is given. "The bodhicitta is the unity of voidness and compassion; it is beginningless and endless, quiescent and bereft of the notion of being and non-being."<sup>26</sup> The Guhyasamāja was very influential in later Esoteric Buddhism.<sup>27</sup>

In general Tantras belonging to the Anuttarayoga-tantra class consist of Mūla-tantra, Uttara-tantras and Ākhyāna-tantras. As for the Guhyasamāja circle, the Mūla-tantra is the first 17 chapters of the Guhyasamāja-tantra (Tōhoku No. 442) of which the Sanskrit text has been published, and the Uttara-tantra is the 18th chapter (Tōhoku No. 443) of that Tantra, and the Ākhyāna-tantras are generally regarded as the following four Tantras, i.e. the Sandhivya-karaṇa-tantra (Tōhoku No. 444), the Vajramālā-tantra (Tōhoku No. 445), the Caturdevīpariprcchā-tantra (Tōhoku No. 446), and the Vajrajñānasamuccaya-tantra (Tōhoku No. 447).

Farquhar, Outline of the Religious Literature in India, Oxford 1920, p. 210; Winternitz II, p. 394), but this is wrong. Winternitz himself changed this opinion (IHQ. vol. 9, No. 1, 1933, pp. 1–10). This problem was fully discussed by Y. Matsunaga in Nakano Comm. Vol., p. 195.

Female deities were already addressed in some dhāraṇīs of the Lotus Sūtra and others.<sup>28</sup> In Vajrayāna the four divine female beings, Locanā, Māmakī, Pāṇḍarā and Tārā were made into a group as Caturdevī.<sup>29</sup> Among them Tārā became most important.<sup>30</sup> Chronological relations of the texts relevant to the Guhyasamāja are as follows.

The Pradīpoddyotana (Tōhoku No. 1785) ascribed to Candrakīrti is the only commentary whose Sanskrit text exists among many commentaries on the Guhyasamāja-tantra.<sup>32</sup> The subject of Pradīpoddyotana is saptālaṅkāra, i.e. the Seven Standards for commenting on the Guhyasamāja-tantra from the standpoint of the Hphags-lugs school.<sup>33</sup>

than Vajrabodhi<sup>36</sup> (671–741) and Amoghavajra<sup>37</sup> (705–774). This text is a strange mixture of superstitious beliefs. The practice of yogins and yoginīs is described in an obscene way. The worship of Dākiṇī also is mentioned. Esoteric Buddhists explain that He represents Great Compassion, and Vajra Wisdom.<sup>38</sup>

The idea of the Threefold Circle-Body was set forth by Amoghavajra.<sup>39</sup> Amoghavajra (A.D. 705–774) stated that the number of the “phases of purity” (清淨句) must necessarily be 17, and that they corresponded to 17 deities’ maṇḍala such as Vajrasattva and so on.<sup>40</sup>

The Hevajrapīṇḍāṭhaprakāśa by Śāntigupta (12th century) is a work of Sahajayāna. In the former half of the work he explains sentences of the Hevajratantra, and in the latter half he discusses the purport of the scripture.<sup>41</sup>

In later Tantric Esoterism, also, some works depicting Maṇḍalas were made. The Niṣpannayogāvalī,<sup>42</sup> composed by Abhayākaragupta (late 11th-early 12th century A.D.), explains how to draw 26 kinds of maṇḍalas, describing the titles and figures of Buddhas and divine beings and their seeds, etc.

Some Esoteric Buddhists taught the practice of the “highest bliss” (mahāsukha), attained by the adepts, in like manner as non-Buddhist Śāktas, by a ritual connected with the enjoyment of meat, intoxicating liquors and sexual intercourse. This teaching is described in the Śricakrasambhāra-tantra.<sup>43</sup> Some texts found in Java teach also the “highest bliss”.<sup>44</sup> The Dākārṇava (-mahāyoginī-tantrarāja) also is available in Sanskrit editions.<sup>45</sup> The Sarvarahasya-tantrarāja<sup>46</sup> is a work which has passages of obscene allusions and of admittance of immoral actions<sup>47</sup> against the traditional Five Precepts.

In later days new divine beings came to be worshipped. The worship of Tārā<sup>48</sup> (the “Rescuer”), the Buddhist goddess, became influential. She is the female counterpart of Avalokiteśvara. A poem in praise of Tārā, composed in polished Kāvya style by the Kashmiri poet Sarvajñamitra is the Sragdharā-stotra<sup>49</sup> (or Ārya-Tārā-sragdharā-stotra). She was called the “lady wearer of the wreath”. Another poem in praise of Tārā is the Bhagavatya Āryatarāyā daṇḍaka-stotra.<sup>50</sup> The Sitātapatrādhāraṇī is a liturgical work in prayer of Tārā.<sup>51</sup>

Acalanātha is a divine being (vidyā-rāja) who has been worshipped with devotion. Even nowadays the worship of him is very strong among common people of Japan. There are ten ritual works to worship Acalanātha (不動尊),<sup>52</sup> which were composed in India and translated into Chinese.

The Trisamaya-rāja is a text enjoining the worship.<sup>53</sup> Hindu belief was assimilated more and more with the lapse of time.<sup>54</sup> To illustrate, Gaṇapati, son of God Śiva, was worshipped under various names (vināyaka, God of Joy,<sup>55</sup> Holy God<sup>56</sup> etc.) in the figure of two Elephant-Head and Humanbody male and female persons embracing each other.<sup>57</sup> Vidyādhara<sup>58</sup> were also introduced.

Multiheaded, multi-armed images of Avalokiteśvara are not monstrous. This form points to some kind of succession of various actions in time. The composite figure of Avalokiteśvara may be said to be an intersection of various<sup>59</sup> symbolisms.

The most popular figure of Vairocana Buddha is as follows: he sits on a lotus flower which represents a causal situation for Tathāgata-hood or the virtue of Bodhisattvahood. He puts a layman's garments instead of monk's robe (kaṣāya). He puts a skirt made of pure white silk and similar coat, but his body is almost naked. He puts bracelets on his arms and elbows. This is the Bodhisattva form. But there is another form, i.e. the Tathāgata form or monk form.<sup>60</sup> These two forms can be still noticed in Japan.

In Borobudur there still exist many sculptures representing images of Esoteric Buddhism.<sup>61</sup>

The appellation Ādibuddha does not appear in ritualistic literature of Esoteric Buddhism. The Ādibuddha is nothing but a development of the concept of the Bodhisattva.<sup>62</sup> Vajrasattva came to be called as such in later days. It was first in the Nāma-saṃgīti that he was extolled.<sup>63</sup>

Many stotras in praise of various Divine beings of this sort were composed and some of them were conveyed to Central Asia.<sup>64</sup>

During the Pāla dynasty, there were at least 115 well-known Buddhist scholars whose names have been identified, and at least 86 Buddhist scholars who went to Tibet and whose names have also been identified.<sup>65</sup> But, later, Esoteric Buddhists were converted to Vaiṣṇavas

Buddhaguhya wrote some works on Esoteric meditation,<sup>66</sup> two (one brief and one large) on the Mahāvairocana-sūtra.<sup>67</sup> Anāgavajra's Prajñopāya-viniścaya-siddhi<sup>68</sup> was composed about 650–800 A.D.<sup>69</sup> The Sādhanamālā, a Tantric work, was compiled in the 11th century.<sup>70</sup> This text includes sixteen vidhis prescribing the worship of Māricī. The Ārya-māricī-dhāraṇī also is a text for the same purpose.<sup>71</sup>

In later Esoteric Buddhism also there appeared many teachers who systematized their teachings. Masters of later Esoteric Buddhism endeavored to write books of importance.

Padmasambhava<sup>72</sup> was born in Ujjainī, and via Bengal entered Tibet in 747 A.D.<sup>73</sup> He is generally mentioned as the founder of Lamaism. He is said to have been the brother-in-law and collaborator of Śāntaraksita. It is likely that Jñānagarbha (born c. 700; entered Tibet c. 740; died c. 760) was also a scholar of Vajrayāna as well as of the Yogācāra school.<sup>74</sup> Ācārya Kukurāja was a teacher of the king Indrabhūti.<sup>75</sup>

Indrabhūti (9th century) wrote works such as Citta-ratna-viśodha.<sup>76</sup>

The Prajñā-jñāna-prakāśa by Devacandra, a disciple of Maitrī-pa (at the end of the 10th century) is a work belonging to the Mahāmudrā sect of Vajrayāna.<sup>77</sup>

Advayavajra (c. 1000–1100) was also called M'naḥ-bdag Maitrī-pa. He was both a great Paṇḍita and a great Siddha. He took an important role in the history of Indian Tantric Buddhism and its diffusion.<sup>78</sup> The collected works of Advayavajra is called the Advayavajra-saṃgraha. The Tattvaratnāvalī,<sup>79</sup> one of the works included in it, admits the Three Vehicles (Śrāvaka, Pratyekabuddha, and Mahāyāna); Mahāyāna is classified as two; i.e. Perfection-Teachings (Pāramitānaya), and Magic-Teaching (Mantranaya), of which the latter is the supreme. He wrote the Sekanirṇaya (or Seka-nirdeśa) also.<sup>80</sup> Other texts of Advayavajra, i.e. the Yuganaddha-prakāśa<sup>81</sup> and the Mahāsukhaprakāśa<sup>82</sup> came to light. The

The Mahāyāna-patha-krama by Subhagavajra, whose Tibetan version exists (Tōhoku, No. 3717; Peking version, No. 4540), sets forth a summary of practice in the Pāramitā-yāna and Esoteric Buddhism. The explanation of the latter is highly Tantric.<sup>84</sup>

The Subhāṣita-samgraha, an anthology, contains extracts from texts of Tantras.<sup>85</sup> Its fundamental idea seems to be citta or bodhicitta. In later Esoteric Buddhism verses were composed to make it easy to memorize mantras.<sup>86</sup>

The idea of śakti was introduced from Tantrism into Vajrayāna. Vajravārāhī is the Śakti of Śambara.<sup>87</sup>

Later Vajrayānists, admitting the authenticity of Mahāyāna texts, wrote some expositions or commentaries from their own viewpoint. “The Exposition of Mahāyāna”<sup>88</sup> (10 vols.), a commentary on the Mahāyāna-śraddhotpāda-śāstra from the standpoint of Vajrayāna, ascribed to Nāgārjuna, seems to have been composed in the Tang period in China. It was greatly esteemed by Japanese Vajrayānists.<sup>89</sup> However, in the past there were some Japanese scholar-priests who held that The Exposition of Mahāyāna ascribed to Nāgārjuna is a spurious work.<sup>90</sup>

There is a group of Esoteric works that is called the Saṃvara literature. Among them the Saṃvarodaya-tantra<sup>91</sup> (“Arising of the Supreme Pleasure”, composed at the end of the 8th century) is the most important work. Commentaries on it are called the Laghusaṃvara-tantra. In this scripture the ultimate reality is defined as jñāna, and saṃvara or ḍākinījāla-saṃvara is regarded as an aspect of the ultimate reality. The ḍākinījāla, i.e. yoginīyogimelaka, was the central religious cult of Saṃvara Tantrism.<sup>92</sup> In the thirty-first chapter<sup>93</sup> of the Saṃvarodaya-tantra the theory of the four cakras and the three naḍīs is set forth. It is shocking that in the rite of Consecration in the Saṃpuṭodbhava-tantra<sup>94</sup> incest between close relatives is encouraged in the name of Saṃvara Buddhism. In Esoteric Buddhism new divine beings came into existence, and they were represented with peculiar figures.<sup>96</sup>

Under the reign of the Pāla dynasty fine arts of Tantric Buddhism flourished. There still remain many masterpieces representing the feature.<sup>97</sup> The ways of meditation on divine beings ruled in the Sādhanamālā have many features in common with those of the Hindus and the Jains.<sup>98</sup>

Nālandā was probably the most important center of Vajrayāna scholarship.<sup>99</sup> In Orissa Tantric Buddhism prevailed till late.<sup>100</sup> In the Swāt valley of north-western India also ancient sites of Vajrayāna have been excavated.<sup>101</sup>

There are some texts which refer to contact with the Muhammedans. The Paramārthasevā, which was composed in the middle of the 11th century A.D. by Puṇḍarīka, refers to such Islamic customs as circumcision and fasting.<sup>102</sup> After the Muhammedan invasion into India the Kālacakra-tantra<sup>103</sup> (c. 1027–1087 A.D. or 12th century according to some scholars) was also composed. This was a canon urging alliance of various religions for checking the inroad of Muhammedanism. In this text the ally of Buddhists with Vaiṣnavas and Śaivas is expected to destroy the Muhammedan army. This Tantra represents the last stage of Esoteric Buddhism. It was especially conciliatory towards the Vaiṣnava religion, being systematized as a whole on the basis of astronomy and astrology.<sup>104</sup> Astrological elements and even the Muhammedan era are mentioned in this work.<sup>105</sup> It refers to Muslims and Mecca.<sup>106</sup> The Sanskrit original has not yet been edited, so the one desiring to learn of its content has to go to its Tibetan version. The Sahajayāna, the last stage of Esoteric Buddhism,<sup>110</sup> puts forth esoteric thought and sexo-yogic practice. In it there were composed two kinds of literature, i.e. caryāgīti and dohā. Of the latter the Dohā-kośa by Sarahapāda (later than 11th century) is best known. Saraha<sup>111</sup> practised arrowsmithing and composed songs of mystic realization. He said: "The Buddha's meaning can be known through symbols and actions, not through words and books." The Dohākośa<sup>112</sup> of Kāṇha, the Caryācarya-tīkā of Siddhācārya, the Dharma-pūjā-vidhi<sup>113</sup> of Raghunandin, and the Śūnya-purāṇa of Pāmaipañḍita are available in printed edition.<sup>114</sup> Kambalapāda or Siddhakambalācārya<sup>115</sup> whose name is mentioned in the Dohākośa left the Navasloki.<sup>116</sup> Dombī Heruka (c. 750 A.D.) composed the Śrīśahajasiddhi.<sup>117</sup> It explains the meditation called utpannakrama. It discusses eighty-four siddhas. It sets forth the utpannakrama as is set forth in the Hevajra-tantra. It inherited the idea of the trisvabhāva of the Yogācāra school.<sup>118</sup>

The Advayasiddhi by Lakṣmīṅkarā Devī, the sister of King Indrabhūti (9th century A.D.), sets forth the practice of Vajrayāna.<sup>119</sup> Lakṣmīṅkarā Devī, and King Indrabhūti were both Siddhas, the perfect ones.

The Caryāgītikośa is a collection of short songs recited by Buddhist preceptors (Siddhācāryas) of the Sahajiyā cult. This is considered to be the earliest example of Bengali literature (c. 12th century).<sup>120</sup> In the Caryāpadas the mystic doctrines have often been described

In later Vajrayāna classification of all Buddhist sects was done in various schemes. This tendency began with Ratnākaraśānti (in the latter half of the 10th century).<sup>121</sup> In his Khasama-tantra the notion of āśraya-parāvṛtti of Buddhist Idealism was adopted.<sup>122</sup>

The worship of Dharma as a deity is a sort of Hindunization of Buddhism. It came to the fore during the reign of the Pāla dynasty, in Bengal, and then it developed in Orissa.<sup>123</sup>

Buddhism, which was a predominant religion in the past of India, was through and through a heterodox one. It was attacked by many Hindu and Jain scholars.<sup>124</sup> In the Kathāsaritsāgara, a collection of stories, compiled by Somadeva (11th century A.D.), Buddhism (Saugata naya) is set forth in detail.<sup>125</sup> The social background of later Buddhism is known from gleanings from the Rājataranṅinī, and other Brahmanical texts.<sup>126</sup> The situation of Buddhism in its declining stage was reported by Dharmasvāmin, the Tibetan pilgrim (1197–1264).<sup>127</sup> At the beginning of the 14th century Buddhism was still flourishing at Kāncīpura (Madras State), the Chola kingdom and Jālandhara (Punjab).<sup>128</sup>

Uḍḍiyāna, the original home of Tāntrikism, has been generally supposed to be located in the Swāt Valley. Uḍḍiyāna was equated by B. Bhattacharya with a well-populated village in East Bengal, named Vajrayoginī (pronounced as Bajrayoginī).<sup>129</sup> But Uḍḍiyāna was not the only original centre of Tāntrikism. Nāgārjunakoṇḍa and Amarāvati in the Krishṇā Valley as the second place and Potalaka Parvata, as the third place, which was located somewhere in the extreme South-east of Madras State, also should be considered as original homes of Tāntrika Buddhism.<sup>129'</sup>

Phases of the decline of Buddhism can be known by the Biography of Dharmasvāmin<sup>130</sup>; a Tibetan monk who made a pilgrimage to India.

Esoteric Buddhism was conveyed to Nepal. The Nine Canons are held in great esteem in Nepal.<sup>131</sup> A Buddhist Purāna called the "Svayambhū-purāṇa" was compiled. the Svayambhū-purāna appeared before the 16th century.<sup>133</sup> In Nepal there is a Buddhist work giving in outline the chief rites of Buddhism, daily, monthly, and annual ceremonies, followed by accounts of the thirteen sacraments.<sup>134</sup>

Vajrayāna was most influential in Tibet.<sup>137</sup> Tson-kha-pa (1357–1419) advocated that Vajrayāna is the best short cut to the position of Lord Buddha in his Sñags-rim (Peking ed., No. 6210).<sup>138</sup>

Vajrayāna spread to Indonesia also.<sup>139</sup> In Java some Sanskrit texts of Esoteric Buddhism were found.<sup>140</sup> They are more or less Tantric.

The erotic tendencies popular in India and Tibet (the Śakti branch or the Zōmitsu after the Japanese) did not gain much following in China and Japan, where only the mystical dhāraṇīs and mudrās (the Junmitsu or pure branch) were emphasized,<sup>141</sup> and the systems have been conveyed to the present in a more purified form. Esoteric Buddhism has been called "Shingon" ("True Word") in Japan, and has been very influential.<sup>142</sup>

In Japan investigations on historic monuments of some significance for Indian studies have been launched. The Five-storied Pagoda at the Daigoji temple, one of the main Vajrayāna cathedrals at Kyoto, was built in 951 A.D. Nearly all wooden parts of the first story are ornamented with Buddhist images and decorative patterns.<sup>143</sup> The subjects of the wall-paintings are the Ryōkai Mandara (Maṇḍala of Vajra-dhātu and Garbha-dhātu), perhaps the only completely preserved one extant in the world and not found even in India; the Eight Forefathers of Vajrayāna Buddhism, i.e. Nāgārjuna, Nāgabodhi, Vajrabodhi, Amoghavajra, Śubhakarasiṃha, I-hsing, Hei-kuo and Kūkai (the founder of Japanese Vajrayāna); the Eight Guardian gods (lokapāla), and many bodhisattvas and devas are described in it. The readers will find it very interesting that the figures of some of these mythological beings and historical persons of India have been found only in Japan. On the panels some Sanskrit characters are found.<sup>144</sup>

26. Some Features of Esoteric Buddhism

Esoteric Buddhism displays some features which are quite different from those of Early Buddhism.

Esoteric Buddhism admits and tolerates human desires and feelings.<sup>1</sup> Adhiṣṭhāna or Kaji (加持) in Japanese, which is a favorite term often used in Vajrayāna ritualism, originally means "subduing others (by spiritual power)."<sup>2</sup>

The philosophical foundation of Esoteric Buddhism seems to make a search for bodhicitta,<sup>3</sup> which is closely connected with altruistic activities.

Esoteric Buddhism culminates in acquiring this-worldly benefit. This feature should not be denied.<sup>4</sup>

p. 163, l. 12: On the Prajñāpāramitā-naya śatapañcāsatikā (理趣經)

All in all, there are about 10 versions in Sanskrit, Tibetan, and among them Hsüan-tsang’s version represents the earliest form (Yūkei Matsunaga, Mikkyō Bunka, No. 104, Dec. 1973, pp. 1–18). Vajrayāna ideas developed through the process of the compilation of various versions (Y. Matsunaga, Jimbun Ronshū, Kōbe Shōka Daigaku, Oct. 1973, vol. 9, Nos. 1–2, pp. 86–99). The original text (Mūlasūtra) of these versions seems to have been named Sarvabuddha-samayoga, which was current in the place where the Vajrasekhara-sūtra was composed. This scripture was originally current in the district of Zahor. (Shūyū Kanaoka, Bukkyō Shigaku, vol. XII, No. 4, pp. 185–196.) The background for the compilation of Rishukyō was discussed by Kōun Kajiyoshi, Journal of Naritasan Institute for Buddhist Studies, 1976, pp. 309–335.

- p. 202, l. 2, [Amitābha]: In the suburb of Mathurā the pedestal of an Amitābha image was found, and it is now preserved in the National Museum of Mathurā (No. 77, 30). According to its inscription it was made in the region of King Huvīṣka, and was donated by a merchant. It is the oldest Amitābha image, and is an evidence that the belief of Amitābha was current in those days. (Hajime Nakamura, Shunjū, July 1978, pp. 4-7.)
It hails from the famous site of Govindnagar in the western outskirts of Mathurā city which yielded rich antiquarian wealth last year. Dated in the first regnal year of King Huvīṣka i.e. 28th year of the Kuṣāna era, the document refers to the installation of an image of Amitābha Buddha on the 26th day of 2nd month of rainy season.
The person responsible for the charity was Nagarakṣita, son of Buddhābala, grandson of the merchant Satvaka, and grandson (daughter's son) of the trader Balakīrti.
The epigraph is significant for more than one reason. Firstly it is dated in the first regnal year of Huvīṣka. Secondly the creed of 'Anuttarajñāna' which became very popular in the Gupta period is met with for the first time in the Kuṣāna age. The most striking feature, however, is the name of the Buddha as Amitābha who is a Dhyāni Buddha.

The tradition of the Dhyāni Buddha was hitherto supposed to be of late origin i.e. of post Gupta epoch although some scholars on stylistic grounds tried to prove its prevalence in the earlier period also. But this is the earliest authentic proof and it antedates the Dhyāni Buddha tradition to 1st-2nd century A.D. The traces of lotus decoration near the left foot of the Buddha are remarkable as lotus is an emblem of Amitābha Buddha. The pedestal unfolds several issues on the organization of Buddhist church. (An information by Dr. Sharma, Director of the Museum.)

1. mahārājasya huviṣkasya saṃ 0 20 (8) ba di 20-6.
2. etasya pūrvaya satvakasya sārthabāhasya pautrasya balak (i) rtasya śreṣṭhisya nāttikenā.
3. buddha balena putreṇa nāga rakṣitena bhavagatī buddhasya amitābhasya pratimā pratiṣṭhāpi(tā).
4. (sarva) buddha pūjāye imena kuśala mūlena sarva (satvā) anuttara buddha jñānam (śrāvitam).

[Translation] "On the 26th day of the (second) month of rainy season in the year 20 (8) (=106 A.D.). On this occasion the image of Amitābha Buddha was installed by Nāgarakṣhita son of Buddhābala, grandson (daughter's son) of the trader Balakīrti for the worship of all Buddhas. Whatsoever merit is in this charity let it be for listening the supreme knowledge of the Buddha." (Reading and translation rendered by R. C. Sharma, Director, Govt. Museum Mathura (U.P.), India, and edited by H. Nakamura according to the standard way of transliteration internationally adopted.)

This is the earliest document referring to the image of the Amitābha. The script of the inscription is Brāhmi of the Kuṣāṇa period and is the same as noticed in other epigraphs of this age. Dr. Sharma identifies the era mentioned here with the Śaka era. The date of Kanīṣka or beginning of Kuṣāṇa era is 78 + A.D. So, he thinks that the date of Amitābha Buddha pedestal is  $78 + 28 = 106$  A.D. However if we assume that Kanīṣka died in 152 A.D. and Huviṣka was enthroned on the 26th year of the Kuṣāṇa era, the 28th year of Kuṣāṇa coincides with 165 A.D. (H. Nakamura: Indo Kodaishi, vol. II, pp. 183 f; 198.) On that assumption we have to think that this statue was made in the middle of the second century A.D.

Chapter VII was discussed by J. Takasaki, IBK, vol. 26, No. 1, Dec. 1977, pp. 111–118.

One Tibetan version of the Laṅkāvatāra is a Tibetan translation of Guṇabhadra's Chinese version. (Jikidō Takasaki, Okuda Comm. Vol., pp. 959–972.)

The Laṅkāvatāra Sūtra. A Mahayana text, translated into English by Daisetz Teitaro Suzuki. Boulder: Prajñā Press, 1978. (Paper back)

The Sung version was translated into Tibetan. (Examined by J. Takasaki. Proceedings of the Soma de Körös Memorial Symposium, ed. by Louis Ligeti, Akadémiai Kiado, Budapest 1978, pp. 459–467.)

The anityatāparivarta of the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra was discussed by Kōsai Yasui, Ōtani Daigaku Kenkyū Nempō, No. 20, Nov. 1967, 67–133.

Pañcadharma in the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra was discussed by Akira Suganuma, Tōyōgaku Kenkyū, No. 5, 1971, 203–221.

p. 231, n. 27: The idea of The Fourfold Truth-Body (四種法身) in its incipient stage can be found in the Laṅkāvatārasūtra. (Ryūsho Hikata, Suzuki Nenpō, Nos. 5–7, 1968–1970, 1–4.)

p. 231, n. 29: Kokan Ogawa→Kōkan Ogawa

p. 231, n. 30: Cittamātra in the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra was discussed by Akira Suganuma, IBK. vol. 16, No. 1, March 1968, 162–166.

p. 232, n. 33: A Tibetan translation of the “楞伽師資記” was recently found. (Kamiyama Daishun, Bukkyōgaku Kenkyū, Nos. 25 and 26, May 1968, 191–209.)

p. 232, n. 35: The original title of 大乘密嚴經 seems to have been “Mahāyānaghanavyūha-sūtra”.

p. 232, n. 41: Biswanath Bhattacharya: The esoteric doctrine of the Maha-yāna-śraddhotpāda-śāstra, an Āsvaghoṣa apocrypha, Visva-Bharati Journal of Philosophy, vol. VIII, No. 2, pp. 67–69.

体・相・用 were discussed by Hiroo Kashiwagi, Ito-Tanaka Comm. Vol. pp. 321–338.

p. 234: The Gayāśīrasūtra (伽耶山頂經) seems to have been composed in the third century A.D. (Tsukinowa: Kenkyū, pp. 408–431, especially, p. 414.)

The Forty-two-Sections Sūtra (四十二章經), which consists of excerpts from various sūtras, was well read in China and Japan. (The Sutra of 42 Sections and Two Other Scriptures of the Mahāyāna School.) Translated from the Chinese by Chu Ch'an. London, The Buddhist Society, 1947. This book includes also the English translations of “The Sutra of the Doctrine Bequeathed by the Buddha” (遺教經) and “The Sutra on the Eight Awakenings of the Great Ones”.

The Sanskrit original and its two*Chinese versions of the Arthaviniścaya-sūtra differ greatly, which fact means that this sūtra underwent great modifications. This sūtra explains various technical terms grouped by way of number. The Sanskrit text and a Sanskrit commentary (Nibandhana) on it written by Bhikṣu Viryaśridatta (8th century A.D.) of Nālandāvihāra are available. (The Arthaviniścaya-sūtra and its Commentary (Nibandhana). Edited and annotated with introduction and several indices by N. H. Samtani. Patna: K. P. Jayaswal Research Institute, 1971.)

2) 仏説法乘義決定經 translated by Chin-tsun-ch' in about 1113 A.D.

Dharmasaṃgraha (「仏説法集名數經」 Taisho, vol. XVII, No. 764). The Sanskrit text was edited by K. Kasahara, F. Max Müller and H. Wenzel, Anecdota Oxoniensia, Aryan Series vol. I, part 5. Cf. Japanese translation of Winternitz: Geschichte, pp. 262, 475, 503.

The Ten Kings Sūtra (十王經) is likely to have been compiled around Samarkand or Tokharestan. (Kanzō Iwasa, Tōyōgaku Kenkyū, No. 2, 1967, 115–119.)

p. 234, n. 11: The Hsiang-fa-chieh-ching (像法決疑經) seems to have been composed in Northern China in the middle of the sixth century, basing itself chiefly on the 隨願往生經 (produced in China) and incorporating various thoughts of Wisdom Sūtras, the Vimalakīrtinirdeśa-, the Dasabhūmika-, the Mahāparinirvāna-, the Brahmajāla-sūtras. (Kiyotaka Kimura, Nanto Bukkyō, No. 33, Dec. 1974, pp. 1–15.)

Various important problems of these schools that had escaped from the attention of scholars are examined in this book.

Some kārikās of the Madhyamaka-kārikā were interpreted by some commentators as expressing Nāgārjuna's own opinion, whereas by others as setting forth opinions of the opponents to Nāgārjuna. ## BUDDHISM IN COMPARATIVE LIGHT

Hajime Nakamura

THIS VOLUME is a comparative study of Buddhism and Christianity which, despite their differences, have striking similarities. Chapters are devoted to probing religious consciousness far below the surface of dogma and traditions. Light is thrown on what Buddhism and Christianity and other religious and philosophical systems have meant to seekers of the truth of humanity. The treatment is selective and is concerned with the comparable features of major traditions shared by all great traditions of the world.

The volume is written from the standpoint of a modern historian and thinker. It stands as a model for bringing out the common universalistic elements in various traditions as well as their special and distinctive features.

A HISTORY OF EARLY VEDĀNTA PHILOSOPHY

Hajime Nakamura

IN THIS VOLUME the author has made clear the details of the pre-Sāṅkara Vedānta philosophy, utilizing not only Sanskrit materials, but also Pāli, Prākṛit (Jain), as well as Tibetan and Chinese sources.

In this respect this is quite a unique work. For this work the author was awarded the Imperial Prize by the Academy of Japan.

LINGUISTIC APPROACH TO BUDDHIST THOUGHT

G. H. Sasaki

EMPLOYING linguistic and philosophical methods the author aims to establish the connection of various terms with the Theravāda on the one hand and with the multitude of meanings proffered by the Mahāyāna Buddhist texts on the other. To determine how such fundamental terms as nekkhamma, dipa, ksānti, sat, prajñā, mana, kamma, anādikālika, anātman, avidyā and pratyaya were used in the two main trends of Buddhist thought, what they mainly signify there, what their special implications are, and whether their import was on the whole theoretical or practical, in itself constitutes an enormous task. Because the terminology employed by Buddhist philosophers who wrote in Buddhist Sanskrit sometimes lends itself to misunderstandings, the author intends to carry out the delicate linguistic analysis necessary for its proper evaluation.

Two appendices have been added so that the linguistic information about the terminology might be related to the evolution of Buddhist thought.
